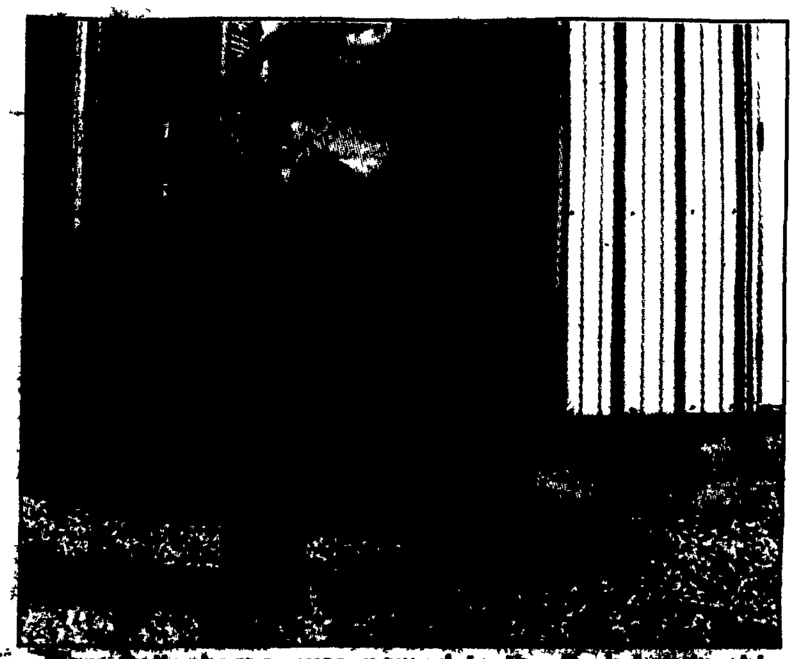
It's Pork Month!

Franklin Hog Farm Manager Takes Progressive Approach

DAVE LEFEVER
Lancaster Farming Staff

MERCERSBURG (Franklin Co.) — In the 11 years Tom Sollenberger has been in the swine business, he's seen some major changes.

Pig litters from the 2,800 sows Sollenberger manages on Franklin Hog Farm are weaned at 19 days of age, compared to the 28-day weaning cycle he saw on the farms he worked for in the early 1990s.



Tom Sollenberger was named to the Pork Leadership Academy earlier this year. He manages a 2,800-sow farrow-to-feeder operation on Franklin Hog Farm, Mercersburg. Photo by Dave Lefever

That's just one example of how the hog industry has been streamlined for top production and efficiency in a relatively short period of time.

Sollenberger was graduated Penn State with a degree in ag science in 1990. In 1992, he took a job with Paramount Feeds, Hagerstown, Md., working with hog farms.

When Franklin Hog Farm was established in Mercersburg in 1996, Sollenberger saw it as a great opportunity to use his hog management skills close to home. The beef and crop farm where he grew up is only two and a half miles away from the farm.

Sollenberger was recently named to the Pork Leadership Academy, a program sponsored by the Pork Checkoff to identify and build leaders in the industry. Sollenberger is one of 20 hog producers from across the country in the new program. The Pennsylvania Pork Producers Council nominated him for the honor.

The group attends four meetings a year that focus on different issues facing the hog industry. The first meeting took place during the World Pork Expo in Iowa this past June.

"That was really neat, connecting with (hog producers) from across the states," Sollenberger said. "There are a lot of different styles and ways people do things."

At that first meeting, participants learned how to deal with

Most Of Pa. Experiences Wettest Year Ever

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — If there was any doubt, Hurricane Isabel washed it away — 2003 will go down in history as the wettest year on record for most of Pennsylvania, according to a precipitation expert in Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences.

"It started raining last October and it really hasn't stopped," said Bryan Swistock, a water resources specialist with Penn State Cooperative Extension. "We got into a weather pattern where storms moving from the south up

Compared to Thursday, Tuesday's sales were another 8.00-10.00 higher after the market was already a full 9.00-11.00 higher on Monday. The current finished market is playing leap frog with itself, as prices are drastically higher from one day to the next. After having over 40 head on Monday bring from 110.00-124.50, there was around another 50 head on Tuesday that sold for 120.00 or higher; with 11 head of high Choice and Prime steers weighing from 1255-1440 lbs trading from 130.00-132.50. It was another wild day in the national markets as well. The current October live cattle contract quickly moved up the limit first thing Tuesday morning to close at 100.32 at days end. It is worth noting that there was some bearishness in most of the further-out months at the Merc though, with contracts from Feb of 2004 and out closing down-the-limit across the Board.

Feeder cattle traders are also trying to keep from giving the current market too much rein, as the spot October feeder cattle contract closed down 137.50 at 107.30; with every month after Oct posting limit-down losses. However, meat markets hit the ground running on Tuesday, with the cutout values of Choice and Select carcasses from 7.00, to over 8.00 higher. Choice cuts from around 189.00-190.00; Select from 166.00-168.00. The Nebraska feedyards held out as long as they could (although its only Tuesday) to sell their finished supplies. They received 115.00 for their live cattle, which are 15.00 higher, and 177.00-180.00 for their dressed steers, which is 22.00-25.00 higher. Who knows where this market is heading, the only thing that is apparent is that producers are absolutely besides themselves with joy, seasoned cattle buyers are shaking their heads in disbelief, and packers are hoping that this thing comes down to a 'reasonable' level. Slaughter cows in Vintage were steady to 3.00 higher, with some weakness noted on the fleshier cows. Slaughter bulls sold with a firmer undertone on a small test. The two-day run included an estimated 332 head of slaughter steers, 40 slaughter heifers, 371 slaughter cows, 15 slaughter bulls, and 279 head of feeder cattle. A full calf report will be issued Tuesday night.

The Vintage Sales Stables held a special feeder cattle sale on Monday the 13th, which can be viewed at http://www.ams.usda.gov/mnreports/LN—LS180.txt.

Choice 2-3 singles 1145-1370 lbs 107.50-110.00 on Monday; Tuesday sales 1100-1450 lbs 115.50-121.00, mostly 116.00-119.00, few up to 122.50. Select and low Choice 2-3 singles 1250- 1285 lbs 98.50-111.00 on Monday; Tuesday sales 1090-1470 lbs 107.00-112.00, primarily 109.00-112.00, as high as 115.00 at times. The number of calves moving directly to slaughter continues to increase over the past few weeks, with over 30 percent of the Graded run moving directly to the kill floor. Graded Holstein bull calves suitable for special fed veal barns sold mixed, with Graded Number One's 10.00 to mostly 25.00 lower; while Graded Number Two and Three's traded mostly steady to 5.00 lower on heaver weights. In the Meat Trade: USDA Carlot veal carcass reported contract calves slaughtered this week: 200.00-265.00. Packers base market 220.00-235.00, mostly 230.00. Linking Up

October 25 marks the anniversary of the opening of the Erie Canal in 1825 The 363-mile-long canal opened an important water route from Lake Erie to the Atlantic ocean, but convincing Congress to authorize funding for the project was a long and difficult process. The canal's champion, DeWitt Clinton of New York, originally approached Congress in 1810. His plan was rejected, but in 1815, this time as mayor of New York City, he tried again, and funding was finally approved in 1816. Construction on the $7.6 million project was started on July 4, 1817. Upon completion of the canal, DeWitt Clinton, then New York's governor, joined in the celebration.

OPINION

Agroterrorism In Pa.: How Real Is Threat?

A few organizations believe we may be overlooking — or the least, becoming too complacent about — threats from bioterrorism.

The thinking goes: it's not a question of whether herds could be infected with foot and mouth disease (FMD) or bovine spongiform encephalopathy (BSE, sometimes called "mad cow disease"), but when.

Lancaster Farming reported in the Aug. 30 issue about the trouble the state diagnostic laboratories could face if FMD or BSE infected state herds, and the labs' almost incredible lack of funding.

On Tuesday, the Pennsylvania Newspaper Association (PNA) Foundation addressed bioterror threats, hearing from Margaret Potter, a member of Pennsylvania's Bioterrorism Preparedness Council. PNA members also heard an expert on infectious disease outbreaks, from SARS to West Nile Virus — Dr. Lee Harrison, head of the infectious diseases epidemiology research unit at the University of Pittsburgh.

According to Penn State, greater resources are needed to prevent and respond to potential terrorist attacks against Pennsylvania agriculture. Recently, a group of Penn State faculty experts and administrators spoke to state legislators about these threats. This investment in resources also would contribute to agricultural efficiency and profitability by increasing security against naturally occurring or unintentionally introduced biological threats, according to the group.

Among those testifying at the Aug. 21 hearing on agroterrorism before the House Veterans Affairs and Emergency Response Committee were Robert Steele, dean of Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences; Bruce McPheron, the college's associate dean for research and graduate education; Bhushan Jayarao, assistant professor of veterinary science; Frederick Gildow, professor of plant pathology; and David Filson, Penn State Cooperative Extension emergency response coordinator and director of extension's South Central Region.

"It is important that we have intervention programs in place to deal with acute episodes," Steele testified. "More important, however, is to have longer range programs in place that are more preventative. Prevention is far more effective and less costly in the long run than is intervention.

"We at Penn State and the College of Agricultural Sciences have cutting-edge capability in both intervention and preventative aspects of agricultural security," he continued. "However, more resources are required to ramp up these efforts so that our discovery research, education and technology transfer capacity can match the pace required of these efforts."

Jayarao told the committee that the introduction of foreign animal diseases into the U.S. could be devastating to Pennsylvania's food sys-

To Consider These Pointers If Using A Dairy Bull For Fall Breeding

Lancaster dairy agent Beth Grove offers these pointers if you are using a dairy bull this fall to breed cows on your farm.

First, make safety a priority. Dairy bulls are dangerous animals — many dairy farmers have been seriously injured or killed by an aggressive bull. Experienced bull handlers suggest using a nose ring on your farm bull with a short (2-foot) chain attached. The chain makes it hard for the bull to attack without stepping on the chain.

Second, make certain the bull is fertile with a breeding soundness exam performed by your veterinarian. It is estimated that 10-15 percent of bulls are poorly fertile.

Third, be aware that disease can be a problem with herd bulls — vibriosis and trichomonosis are both spread by natural service. These diseases can cause low fertility and long days open in a herd of cows, as well as abortion or chronic infection. When buying a bull, be sure it is blood tested for BVD and has been vaccinated for IBR, BVD, BRSV, PI3, and lepto.

Be sure to properly feed your bull. Ideally, a bull should receive a ration similar to that of the dry cows in the herd. Bulls that receive a high-energy ration may develop lameness and often become overweight and lazy.

It is important to rotate young bulls through the herd often, with the idea of not getting too many heifer calves from one particular sire. If the bull's genes for milk production are poor, you don't want to end up milking 30 of his daughters!

Finally, if you are considering whether to use a herd bull or keep the herd bull on your farm, remember the genetic disadvantages to using a natural service bull. A 2002 study from the USDA-AIPL compared DHIA production between daughters sired by proven bulls and daughters of natural service bulls in herds across the country. They found that AI daughters averaged about 970 pounds more milk per lactation than daughters of herd bulls.

To Be Aware Of The Historical Significance Of This Year's Weather

If there was any doubt, Tropical Storm Isabel washed it away — 2003 will go down in history as the wettest year on record for most of Pennsylvania, according to a precipitation expert in Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences.

"It started raining last October and it really hasn't stopped," said Bryan Swistock, a water resources specialist with Penn State Cooperative Extension. "We got into a weather pattern where storms moving from the south up along the coast brought lots of moisture to Pennsylvania, and it looks like it is continuing."

After five years of prolonged drought that left groundwater levels at historic lows in the southeastern part of the Keystone State, the turnaround has been sudden, dramatic, and complete. Streams and rivers are running bank full, reservoirs are overflowing, and groundwater across the state has been fully recharged. Many farmers went from consecutive years of crop loss because of lack of moisture to struggling to find periods dry enough to put equipment on their fields to plant, tend, and harvest their crops.

"The four-month period of May through August was by far the wettest ever recorded in all of Pennsylvania, with 23 inches of rain falling — close to 2 inches more than we ever had during that period," Swistock said. "Most parts of the state have already received 35 inches for the year."

While Isabel did not bring nearly as much rain to the Northeast as was expected, she reminded weather forecasters of another infamous woman in Pennsylvania's past.

"This won't go down as the wettest summer ever for the southeastern part of the state," said State Climatologist Paul Knight, an instructor in Penn State's College of Earth and Mineral Sciences. "In 1972, Hurricane Agnes dumped 16 inches of rain on southeastern counties. For that region, that year's precipitation record might never be eclipsed."

So what is causing these deluges? "I don't know whether you can attribute them to anything," Swistock said. "It is just the weather pattern we have been in since last fall. We really don't know why it has happened."

Knight suspects the cause of the weather pattern has something to do with water temperatures in the North Atlantic or the northern Pacific Ocean. "Let's look at this weather pattern in context," he explained. "It has wiped out the drought that existed in the southeastern United States, too. The whole eastern part of the country has changed from hot and dry to cool and wet. We don't yet understand the mechanism that would cause a change of this magnitude. We are still learning about how that works."

For years, Knight noted, a lot of weather patterns have been attributed to water temperature changes in the South Pacific. But this is different. "There have been no significant changes in the South Pacific," he said. "It is not related to El Nino or La Nina."

THE BIBLE SPEAKS

BY LAWRENCE W. ALTHOUSE

AN ADVANCED COURSE

Background Scripture:
2 Peter 2:1.
Devotional Reading:
Ephesians 3:14-21.

A seminary professor is said to have advised a colleague to list his course in the seminary catalog as "an advanced course."

"Why would I do that?" his colleague replied. "It's a beginner's course."

"Yes," replied the professor, "but I've found that no one ever wants to admit that they need a beginner's course. Everyone wants to think of themselves as 'advanced.' Besides," he continued, "the only difference between the beginner's and advanced courses is that, in the advanced course, we simply try to get the students to apply what they learned in the beginner's course."

I don't know if that reasoning would apply to all academic subjects, but I believe it applies to Christian nurturing and growth. The advanced course in Christian discipleship is nothing more than applying what we learn in the beginner's course.

In Christian discipleship the beginner's course is learning to know Jesus not as an idea, but as a personal reality. If we can come to the point where we can say that we have a pretty good grasp of who Jesus was and what he was all about, we will have learned enough to meet practically all the problems, concerns, and challenges that come to us in life.

All Things

As the writer of 2 Peter says, "His divine power has granted to us all things that pertain to life and godliness, through the knowledge of him who called us to his own glory and excellence. . . ." (1:3). To gain "knowledge" of Jesus is to gain knowledge for the living of a full and fruitful life. When we get to know Jesus, 2 Peter says that we "become partakers of the divine nature" (1:4). It is not that Jesus lays down rules and regulations for us to follow, but an example from his own life that we can make our own.

Obviously this doesn't all happen at once. Rather, it is a matter of growth as a disciple of Jesus. Conversion to Jesus Christ must be followed by growth after the example of Jesus. That is how we "become partakers of the divine nature." Sometimes it is a great leap forward, followed by a period of shuffling and stumbling along.

All of this is a part of Christian nurturing. And what is the aim of this Christian growth, nurturing, and education? It is not to learn things about Jesus so much as it is to learn to be like him as much as we can. If there were a final examination for any course in Christian discipleship, it would not ask us to recite a creed, explain a doctrine, or to give scriptural facts and figures.

Growing Toward Love

When 2 Peter speaks of making "every effort to supplement your faith. . . ," his use of the word "faith" does not mean a body of knowledge in the mind, an accumulation of things the disciple has learned about Jesus. The "faith" he speaks of is the trusting relationship between believer and Lord that produces the life of a disciple: ". . . supplement your faith with virtue, and virtue with knowledge, and knowledge with self-control, and self-control with steadfastness, and steadfastness with godliness, and godliness with brotherly affection, and brotherly affection with love" (1:5).

We may learn all about Jesus Christ, but if we have not grown into following him, we are still in the beginner's course.

Understanding the creeds, doctrines, and theologies of Christianity may be beyond the intellectual reach of many would-be disciples, but understanding the kind of life Jesus calls us to live is within our grasp. We know all about his life and the example he set, but confronted by the challenges of daily living, we tend to forget what we know. We need to be reminded.

As 2 Peter says it: "Therefore I intend always to remind you of these things, though you know them and are established in the truth that you have. . . . And I will see to it that after my departure you may be able at any time to recall these things" 1:12-15. Through a routine of prayer, study, corporate worship, and Christian education, we are constantly reminded of what we already know.

So, have you graduated yet to an advanced course?

The milk that had been earmarked for Florida then became more surplus milk in the shipping regions. Bottled milk sales in all section of the region were reported as slower this week and more surplus milk was being sent to cheese and butter/powder plants. In some states, union workers are striking grocery chain stores. This is having a negative impact on bottled milk and other dairy product sales. The lost sales are being partially offset by improved sales at other retail outlets, but disruptions in logistics are occurring. Some balancing plant contacts reported more milk than they had seen for quite some time. The extra milk was easily handled, but volumes were up. The Monday holiday did have some impact on milk and cream usage.

The condensed skim market is little changed. Demand for Class III is light due to price and most sales were for Class II accounts.

The fluid cream market is dramatically weaker this week. Traders and producers report the cream supplies have turned from very tight early in the month to long this week. A combination of the end of the ice cream season, the holiday week, and the yet-to-start holiday items have pushed the market from firm to weak. Most contacts feel that this is just a lull in the market. Spot prices are mixed. The CME cash butter average did increase slightly last week, but multiples did move lower at the upper end of the range Ice cream output is slowing seasonally and some plants were down for Monday's holiday. Cream cheese makers would like to take advantage of all the extra cream that is available, but many have more than enough cream under contract to keep them full. Churning activity is heavier at some plants as more excess cream is available. Some loads are being shipped to Upper Midwest butter makers.

MAKE PLANS FOR FIRST HALF OF 2004

- Butter prices strengthen.
- Cheese remains stable.
- CME offering "average" prices.

Nothing new came out of the Chicago Mercantile Exchange this week. Block cheese prices are still $1.60 per pound and barrels averaged $1.5430. Butter prices strengthened slightly, rising from $1.17 per pound on Monday to $1.19 on Wednesday and Friday.

Class III futures are expected to decline from $14.23 per CWT for October 2003 to $11.85 per CWT by December. Many dairy producers are focused on this last quarter, wondering why future milk prices are expected to decline. But producers should instead be focused on the first two quarters of 2004.

The Chicago Mercantile Exchange is offering Class III futures that are averaging $11.39 per CWT for January through June 2004. Dairy producers interested in hedging or protecting their future milk supplies may want to consider these prices. Here's why. The Class III price has averaged $11.46 during the first six months of 1998-2003. Thus the "market" or in this case the Chicago Mercantile Exchange is offering a price very close to this 5-year average.

Since we don't know what will happen during the first two quarters of 2004, producers may want to consider some protection at these historically average prices. If prices get higher, consider locking in more milk.

Dairy producers may want to start drawing up "budgets" or "marketing plans" for the upcoming year. Those plans should include monthly estimates of milk production, expected prices, and associated costs. One should have already been tracking their monthly "basis" or relationship between the farm price and the Class III price during 2002 and 2003. These marketing plans should then be used to plan 2004 income and expenses, and budget labor and capital needs. It can also be used as a guide for forward pricing milk.

Average Farm Feed Costs for Handy Reference

To help farmers across the state to have handy reference of commodity input costs in their feeding operations for DHIA record sheets or to develop livestock feed cost data, here's last week's average costs of various ingredients as compiled from regional reports across the state of Pennsylvania.

Remember, these are averages, so you will need to adjust your figures up or down according to your location and the quality of your crop.

SOY-BASED BIODIESEL.

You grow soybeans. Your soybean checkoff helped develop soy-based biodiesel. Government and industry studies show it's good for your engines, the environment, and U.S. farmers.

Farmers are the second-largest consumers of diesel fuel in the U.S. So when you request biodiesel, fuel suppliers will listen. Ask your fuel supplier to carry B2 - a two-percent blend of pure, ASTM D-6751 quality soy-based biodiesel. It's available throughout the United States, so why not ask for it and use it?

Using B2 on your farm supports the industry's growth, by increasing the number of suppliers for high-quality biodiesel fuel. And, a B2 blend provides increased lubricity for your engines, a boost in cetane, and reduced dependence on foreign oil

Studies show that if every farmer used B2, we could utilize more than 50 million bushels of soybeans per year - the combined 2001 annual soybean harvests of Delaware, Maryland, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York. Imagine the potential.

ASK FOR IT. PUMP IT. PROFIT.

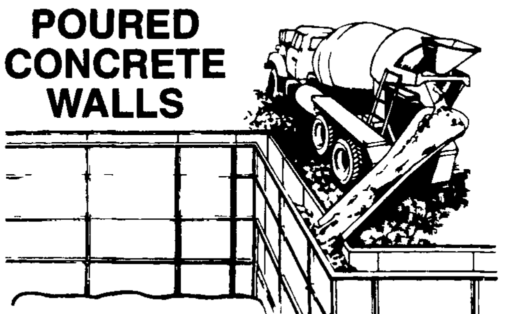
POURED SOLID CONCRETE
STORAGE SYSTEM SPECIALISTS

START WITH THE BEST!
POURED CONCRETE WALLS



You get about 40% more concrete for your dollar with a poured, solid concrete basement as compared to a hollow core block basement

A poured solid concrete basement weighs about 50 lbs more per cubic foot! Far denser What's more, poured solid concrete walls are monolithic there are no joints!

This is why laboratory tests show poured, solid concrete basements have many times the flexural and compressive strength to withstand the side and down pressures caused by earth wind water and building loads and the material density to resist water penetration

Best of all, thanks to modern and efficient construction techniques, poured, solid concrete basements are competitively priced

Solid Concrete For:

- Manure Pit Walls
- Hog House Walls
- Barnyard Walls
- Chicken House Walls
- Retaining Walls
- House Foundation Walls
- Silage Pit Walls
- Cistern Walls
- Concrete Decks
- Concrete Pit Tops

It's Time To Lime!

You know how tough it is to spread wet lime. And fertilizer is too expensive to waste. Our new 56i spreader does both jobs with ease. Plus, it has no equal when it comes to spreading "sloppy" material.

Stoltzfus Spreaders have been known as unique, "top-of-the-line" ag spreaders since 1947.

- Press-wheel ground drive
- Walking-beam suspension
- Corrosion-proof steel hopper
- UHMW plastic floor
- Lime: 3 tons / acre max. Fertilizer: 125 lbs. / acre min.

Farmers are still using Stoltzfus Spreaders they've had 20 years or more. That means your investment in a versatile Stoltzfus Spreader will add up to a very smart buy indeed.

Select Sire Power Will Offer New Breeding Info At 2004 Farm Show

MYERSTOWN (Lebanon Co.) — Select Sires, a longtime exhibitor at the Pennsylvania Farm Show, will return again this coming January with a complete, updated package of information for cattle breeders.

"We'll have all the new information for both beef and dairy," said Kirk Sattazahn, Select Sire Power representative from Myerstown, Lebanon County.

Select Sire Power's booth in the new Expo Hall Annex will feature new sire directories, updates on the timed breeding program, and latest research findings on CIDR heat synchronization devices.

Select Sires includes 10 member cooperatives in the U.S., including Select Sire Power on the East Coast. The company provides stud service across the country and around the world.

"Anywhere there's a cow, I think we're selling semen now," Sattazahn said.

Sattazahn said Select Sires has had a booth at the Pennsylvania Farm Show for a least 30-40 years.

Chris Herr Joins PennAg Industries As Assistant VP For Poultry Council

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — Christian R. Herr joins the PennAg Industries Association staff and brings with him a lifetime of agricultural experience. He was reared on his family's sheep farm in Lancaster County.

While studying at Penn State for a B.S. in Agricultural Education, Chris interned for former Secretary Samuel E. Hayes, then Minority Whip in the House of Representatives.

After graduation, Herr went to work for the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture (PDA) as an administrative officer for the Bureau of Agricultural Development. His career with the PDA lasted 18 years. Through the years, Chris moved from being the Director for the Bureau of Agricultural Development to being the Director of Policy, Planning, and Legislation. For the last eight years, he was Deputy Secretary for Regulatory Programs.

Along with receiving Recognitions of Appreciation from the Pennsylvania Retailers Association, Federation of Humane Societies and Federation of Dog Clubs, Herr was awarded the 2002 National FFA Honorary American Farmer Award. This year he received the 2003 Don Evans Memorial Friends of Agriculture Award.

Herr's duties as assistant vice president of the Poultry Council will include running the food booth at the Pennsylvania State Farm Show, hosting the PennAg Poultry Golf Outing each October, and orchestrating the Spring Poultry Banquet scheduled next year at the Hershey Lodge and Convention Center, April 23, 2004.

Herr is a member of the Pennsylvania State Grange, the Cumberland Valley FFA Agriculture Advisory Board, the Grassland Alumni FFA Board, the United Way Fund Distribution Committee, the Tri-County Big Brothers/Sisters, and the Penn State Alumni Association.

He currently resides in Camp Hill with his wife and two children. He will be working from PennAg's Harrisburg office and can be reached at (717) 651-5920 or by e-mail at cherr@pennag.com.

Farmland Board Preserves Acres

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — The Pennsylvania Farmland Preservation Board met Oct. 9 to review and approve a group of 21 farmland preservation easement applications from 12 counties.

Agriculture Secretary Dennis C Wolff announced that the newly approved applicants would join more than 2,000 other producers in the commonwealth who had committed to keep their land in agriculture forever in exchange for a one-time purchase of development rights.

"Pennsylvania leads the nation in the number of acres preserved for future generations to enjoy an abundant supply of locally-produced food," Wolff said. "With the board's actions today, we have a total of 265,137 acres enrolled in the program since it began in 1989."

Wolff explained that the statewide program works in concert with county farmland preservation boards operating in a majority of Pennsylvania counties. The county programs recommend individual farms to ensure the most effective use of program resources.

"This is a team effort between state and local governments to ensure that Pennsylvania remains a leader in agriculture into the future. Our local partners are critical to the process, and we are grateful for their commitment," Wolff said.

Golden Anniversary Manheim Farm Show Spins Real Wealth For Youth

ANDY ANDREWS
Editor

MANHEIM (Lancaster Co.) — Manheim Farm Show was decorated in a little bit of blue and a lot of gold.

Before the start of last week's livestock champion sale, Marlin Becker announced that it was "50 years ago since we began."

At the fair's golden anniversary gala, Becker pointed to the efforts of everyone through the years. Becker spoke glowingly about the sale ring bedding, tastefully decorated by the Manheim FFA Chapter in blue with stenciled letters declaring not only "50," but "FFA" and

"4-H."

Before Becker's announcement was done, he saluted one man who supported the program since the beginning — Mylin Good, who turned 91 this week.

Becker noted Good was the "first" 4-H leader in the county, but Good corrected him and said he was actually the "third."

Nevertheless, Becker honored Good before the start of the 50th anniversary Manheim Farm Show Youth Livestock Sale late last week at the fairgrounds.

Good told the crowd, which included standing-room only near ringside, "I want to thank those who supported, over the years, the 4-H and FFA."

At the sale, there were 16 market goats, 99 market hogs, 18 market lambs, 12 market steer, and 25 dairy beef. Champion youth dairy milk, exhibited by Corby Ziegler, was purchased for $1,175 by Manheim Auto Auction. Reserve youth dairy milk, exhibited by Blake Brubaker, was purchased by Blake's grandparents, Pat and Paul Miller, for $500.

Items for the horse club were auctioned for $2,050 to Dorothy Metzler.

With photos, following are the results of the sale.

the media in light of increasing attention to issues such as odor, water quality, and animal treatment on hog farms.

Part of the training included agricultural reporters asking them questions about hog production. That was the easy part, according to Sollenberger. A mock television interview was more challenging.

"They were asking tough questions," Sollenberger said.

At home, Sollenberger hasn't had any problems with neighbors or media challenging the operation. One likely reason is that the farm's location in the Cumberland Valley near the Tuscarora Mountains seems ideal. It is mostly surrounded by dairy farms, and no housing developments can be seen for miles around.

While the farm itself is only 96 acres, about 1,500 acres of neighboring land are approved through the Pennsylvania Nutrient Management Act to receive manure from the operation. Most of the land belongs to dairy farmers who get the manure for free and are usually happy to have it.

The 1,500 acres is actually about three times as many acres as are required by law for the size of the operation, Sollenberger said. But because of weather challenges (especially in wet years such as this one) and farmer preferences, the extra acres allow a lot more flexibility in getting the manure out without compacting soil or overapplying nutrients.

Giving away the manure helps keep hauling costs down, because nearby farmers are more likely to take it.

"If you give it, they want it more, and you don't have to haul it as far," Sollenberger said.

"We try to keep our manure within a three-mile radius," he said. "I can't say it always happens, but we try."

He estimated about 90 percent of the manure is spread on fields within three miles of the farm.

Franklin Hog Farm's location in the Cumberland Valley near the Tuscarora Mountains seems ideal for avoiding neighborhood conflicts. It is mostly surrounded by dairy farms, and no housing developments can be seen for miles around.

Franklin Hog Farm uses a two-stage lagoon system. In the first stage, solids drop out and the less concentrated manure then moves to the second stage.

The stage-2 manure has only about one-third of the original nitrogen concentration, allowing more flexibility for spreading on neighbors' fields with less risk of applying too much nitrogen or phosphorus.

Sollenberger said he is prepared for phosphorus planning to be required in the near future as part of the state's Nutrient Management Act overhaul.

Another way Sollenberger has tried to stay ahead of the regulation curve: "We made sure our (manure) hauler is certified."

According to Sollenberger, the Nutrient Management Act, as it

Get To Know Your Ag Reporter

sues Forum at the Landis Valley Museum.

Two journalists, one working for a large metropolitan daily newspaper and the other for a regional based TV news station, addressed those questions before more than four dozen ag industry representatives at the breakfast forum.

First, get to know your ag reporter, noted Jim DePury, news director for WPMT TV Fox 43, York. Second, realize that "a lot of our readers don't know anything about farming," said Sandy Bauers, West Chester, staff writer for the Philadelphia Inquirer.

The challenge — and the criticism small-circulation papers face — is that the reporter often has to "rush in, grab something, rush back, and write it up," noted Bauers, when it is an agricultural event. But a large daily paper, with readers in the hundreds of thousands such as the Inquirer, takes a different approach. Editors assign reporters to take more time to develop in-depth, well-researched stories that will win readers' hearts.

Total Inquirer readers on a daily basis are between 400,000-600,000. Sunday Inquirer readership tops 1 million.

Some journalists "write about farming as if it's a foreign country, or something, and to some readers, it is," Bauers said. She recounted a time she spent at the county 4-H roundup and "embedded" herself in the story — following the 4-H'er through the barns to the pig auction, and finding the true story of what it was like to raise and show a hog. "It turned out to be a wonderful, heartwarming story, and an educational story," she said.

The challenge: different readers have different and varied levels of interest and expertise, and editors clamor to get reporters to write a story that will grab their attention in a limited amount of time.

The Inquirer, noted Bauers, often takes time to have luncheons with "focus groups" of readers to ask them what they want the daily paper to focus on. People still want to be "informed, entertained, and intrigued," said the staff writer.

When a reporter calls, Bauers offers suggestions:

- Give as much information as you can — and ask the reporter who else they plan to call.
- Try to find out what needs to be said ahead of time.
- Suggest other people for the reporter to call to get a fair, balanced story about the issues.
- Help reporters "navigate" the issues. Some reporters have a tough time just calling to find the right person to speak to about a developing story.
- Remember, reporters are only human. Bauers recalled a time when she referred to a street in Philadelphia, in a major story, as "First Street."

She said, "There is no First Street. Only Front Street. We make mistakes, we're only human."

Bauers admitted she is concerned about the accuracy of every story. She said she woke up from deep sleep one night, sat up in bed, and worried about what she wrote. "Was (the reference) 42 or 43?" said the staff writer. "What did I write?"

Jim DePury, Fox 43, said the TV station covers a market comprised of 1.5 million viewers. Television, he said, is a media that shows you "the sights and sounds" of a story, but using TV as a basis for all your information is "a mistake," he said. Sometimes TV news can be quite narrow or superficial on issues.

DePury gave credit to TV producers, who "are our best journalists anywhere," he said.

But TV journalists are only human, also. Many are on "their second or third career job," said the news director. But that shouldn't impede good newsgathering. He said that while new reporters may not have the depth and experience in reporting, "99 percent of the time they will be able to handle it."

And TV coverage of ag issues continues to probe in ways that are similar to investigative stories. He mentioned the stories about milk prices going up, and farmers not getting a fair share. DePury said, "Is the farmer getting the money back or the middle man? Where is (the money) going in the chain?"

Fox 43 News at Ten tries to focus on individuals within the community, noted DePury. The "lighting rod" of success, noted the news director, is if "both sides call me and accuse me of favoring the other side. If everybody hates me, that means I'm doing a good job."

The TV station does a lot of weather stories, he noted, and farm economics. The station is looking for farm success stories for their broadcasts. They have eight reporters in 11 counties, with offices in York, Harrisburg, and Lancaster.

DePury's advice to distribute the word about ag: call the assignment desk, contact a regional reporter, "and get friendly with reporters," he said. "Journalists are paid to listen and be approachable."

When calling the station, let them know what the "hook" of the story is, not simply tell them there is a "conference hearing" or something, noted DePury.

The next Ag Issues Forum is scheduled Friday, Oct. 24, at 7:30 a.m. at Armstrong Manor.

Wettest Year Ever

along the coast brought lots of moisture to Pennsylvania, and it looks like it is continuing."

After five years of prolonged drought that left ground water levels at historic lows in the southeastern part of the state, the turnaround has been sudden, dramatic and complete. Streams and rivers are running bank full, reservoirs are overflowing and groundwater across the state has been fully recharged.

According to Swistock, many farmers went from consecutive years of crop loss due to lack of moisture to struggling to find periods dry enough to put equipment on their fields to plant, tend, and harvest their crops.

"The four-month period of May through August was by far the wettest ever recorded in all of Pennsylvania, with 23 inches of rain falling — close to 2 inches more than we ever had during that period," he said. "Most parts of the state have already received 35 inches for the year."

"This won't go down as the wettest summer ever for the southeastern part of the state," said State Climatologist Paul Knight, an instructor in Penn State's College of Earth and Mineral Sciences. "In 1972, Hurricane Agnes dumped 16 inches of rain on southeastern counties. For that region, that year's precipitation record might never be eclipsed."

THE ADVANTAGES OF ROASTED CORN

* Earlier Harvest - Our roaster will dry corn down eight to ten points of moisture.

* Higher Digestibility - Research studies show that roasted corn is more digestible than raw corn. The energy level is increased by 10%.

* Purer Feed - Our flame roaster can effectively remove mold spores and reduce toxin levels that are harmful to livestock, swine and poultry.

* Drier Total Ration - With less fermented feed. Supplementing the hay and corn silage diet with dry corn aids better rumen health.

* Greater Profits - Advances milk production, according to a recent trial at New Bolton Center, with at least a 2-1 return on investment.

tem and economy. "American agriculture is highly sophisticated. However, it still remains vulnerable to introduction of foreign animal disease."

Among the diseases of great concern are African swine fever, FMD, and bovine spongiform encephalopathy (BSE), sometimes referred to as "mad cow disease."

"Allowing a foreign disease agent into our livestock could have disastrous effects on all aspects" of our food system, from on-farm production, food processing and retailing to consumer safety and confidence, he said.

Jayarao said foreign disease organisms could enter the country with imported animals or animal-based food products, insects and migratory birds, used farm machinery, or feedstuffs. "Travelers who do not respect customs regulations or do not declare their goods pose the greatest source of risk," he said.

Gildow warned the committee of the potentially far-reaching effects that an introduced plant pathogen could have on agricultural crops. "The deliberate release of a super virulent or genetically modified plant pathogen able to destroy large areas of a major food crop could have long-lasting economic and psychological effects," he said. "Immediately following the release of the pathogen, growers would suffer economic losses associated with increased costs of attempted control measures. At the end of the season, growers would suffer reduced yields for sale.

"In some cases, the occurrence of a new pathogen may trigger quarantine embargoes, eliminating national or international markets. If the pathogen produces a toxin, public confidence in food safety could become an issue."

Gildow said to achieve adequate levels of biosecurity for Pennsylvania crops, additional state funding is needed for university research and infrastructure. "Improved disease diagnostic facilities . . . (and) biocontainment facilities are required," he said. "We need support to educate and train personnel in biosecurity. We need to develop a secure communications network with the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, with regional and county-based surveillance personnel and with other diagnostic labs located at land-grant universities. Support of research on plant disease resistance . . . is needed in order to identify naturally occurring resistance genes against major foreign pathogens."

Filson emphasized Penn State Cooperative Extension's long tradition of helping the state's citizens deal with emergency situations. Extension has a network of communications (satellite downlinks, computers) in every county that allows rapid, two-way communications and sharing of important information.

Pennsylvania stands at a strategic point for distribution, with 40 percent of the nation's population lying within a 500-mile radius of Harrisburg. This combination of production, processing and distribution is unique and — for someone intent upon food or fiber as a target for disrupting the economy and society — places Pennsylvania in the cross-hairs.

Every farm should have a plan, too. We don't want to sound any kind of panic, but plans such as these are critical in these strange and trying times.

Rodale Field Study Measures Long-Term Effects Of Organic Farming

DAVE LEFEVER
Lancaster Farming Staff

KUTZTOWN (Berks Co.) — A 23-year research project conducted by the Rodale Institute shows that organic farming methods build carbon and nitrogen levels in the soils, reduce greenhouse gases in the atmosphere, and match or exceed conventional corn and soybean yields, according to Paul Hepperly, Rodale research manager.

On Oct. 10, the institute hosted a tour of the 12-acre research site at Rodale's 333-acre organic farm near Kutztown.

Hepperly explained the study's findings to about 50 invited guests, including Dennis Wolff and Kathleen McGinty, secretaries of the Pennsylvania departments of agriculture and environmental protection, respectively.

According to Wolff, the study's findings on greenhouse gas reduction show "beyond the shadow of a doubt" the potential for developing a market for "carbon credits," in which farmers would be rewarded for using methods that capture carbon dioxide from the atmosphere.

Three different farming systems were tested in the study, which began in 1981. Two of the systems were organic, using no commercial fertilizers, herbicides, or pesticides. The third was a "conventional" row crop system, using applications of synthetic fertilizers, herbicides, and pesticides based on Penn State recommendations.

All three systems were based on a corn/soybean crop rotation and conventional tillage, although the organic plots used longer rotations that included small grains, hay, and cover crops.

Both organic systems used legume cover crops to boost nitrogen levels in the soil. The only difference is that one of them also received applications of dairy cow manure once every five years.

For many farmers, yield results might be the most surprising upshot of the study.

Hepperly reported that corn and soybean yields from all three trials were not significantly different in years with adequate rainfall.

After a transition period of four years, the organic plots produced 125-150 bushels of corn and 40-45 bushels of soybeans per acre in years with good rainfall, same as in the conventional system.

But during droughty seasons (six out of the past 12 years, according to Hepperly), the organic plots yielded 20-30 percent higher in both corn and soybeans, he said.

In the drought of 2002, Hemperly said both organic plots produced 118 bushels of corn per acre, while the conventional row crop system yielded 87 bushels per acre. Soybean yields showed a similar disparity, he noted.

The structure of soil built up by the organic system allows plant roots better access to water and makes the difference in dry years, according to Hepperly. Building up measurable levels of stable organic matter in the soil is a slow process, but results can be seen in several years, he noted.

In 23 years, the organic plots that used legumes and cow manure as soil amendments increased from about 1.8 to 2.5 percent in organic matter. The plots using legumes alone went from 2.0 to 2.4 percent.

"You wouldn't even be able to see this process in the short term," Hepperly said. However, "after three or four years, you can notice a significant difference."

This accumulation of organic — or carbon-based — matter in soil excites people concerned about global warning because it means less of the "greenhouse gas" carbon dioxide is free in the atmosphere.

In other words, soil that is accumulating organic matter acts as a carbon "sink" and reduces the threat of global warming, according to Rodale's interpretation of the study.

Hepperly reported that organically farmed soil in the trials captured 600-1,000 pounds of carbon per acre per year in the top foot of soil. The process is known as "carbon sequestration."

The study results also show that nitrogen levels increased by 44-88 pounds per acre per year in the top 12 inches of soil in the organic plots.

In the conventional system, neither carbon nor nitrogen levels increased significantly in the soil, according to Hepperly's report.

Other findings noted in the study report include:

- Organic systems emitted one third fewer greenhouse gases by eliminating energy inputs required to produce synthetic pesticides and fertilizers.
- Production costs were 26 percent lower in the organic systems.
- The organic systems reduced groundwater pollution by eliminating the use of chemicals such as atrazine.

The Pennsylvania departments of agriculture and environmental protection have agreed to support further study, education, and outreach efforts of Rodale Institute to better understand the effects of organic farming on global warming.

"Pennsylvania is fortunate to be at the center of this exciting research," said Dennis Wolff, Pennsylvania secretary of agriculture. "We have thought for years that carbon sequestration and the development of a market for carbon credits offers new income opportunities for farmers, even as they help the environment. (Rodale's) research results show that potential beyond the shadow of a doubt."

Kathleen McGinty, Pennsylvania DEP secretary, said "Rodale's findings will be most helpful in the development of future greenhouse gas mitigation strategies that will be beneficial to Pennsylvania's citizens, its farmers, and its business owners."

According to a Rodale Institute statement, the study was the first to differentiate organic farming from conventional ag in its carbon sequestration ability.

"Organic farming is a powerful tool in the global warming arsenal," said Anthony Rodale, chairman of Rodale Institute. "It puts agriculture into a lead role — in regenerating the environment."

Wolff said that a carbon credit system would offer a certain number of dollars per acre to farmers using no-till and/or organic practices. He and McGinty will be having meetings on developing such a program within the month, he said.

"It's one way Pennsylvania could lead the nation, through that kind of approach," Wolff said.

Paul Hepperly, Rodale research manager, stands in a mixed cover crop of wheat and hairy vetch used in organic rotation with corn and soybeans in field trials.

Sponaugle Lamb Takes Supreme Honors At Rockingham Fair

GAY BROWNLEE
Virginia Correspondent

HARRISONBURG, Va. — Laura Sponaugle, 17, of Grottoes on Tuesday, Aug. 12, showed the lamb that took supreme grand champion honors at the Rockingham Co. Fair. It had first won the middleweight division. The Suffolk cross animal weighed in at 125 lbs.

Because two of her other lambs took the supreme grand champion title in the pairs show, Sponaugles lambs had a banner day at the fair.

Sponaugle, herself, was the senior showman winner.

"This is the fourth year with singles and the second with pairs," she reported, adding that developing a champion market animal is hard work.

"For about three or four weeks I am out there twice a day," she said. "We weigh them every two or three days."

She said the lambs are kept on full feed is they need to gain weight, but maintained on oats if they dont need to gain.

The Spotswood High School senior said she genuinely enjoys showing and thats why she does it. She observed that an exhibitor has a lot of responsibility but for herself, there's a lot of satisfaction in fulfilling her responsibilities.

Her aim in another year when she, hopefully, is a student at the James Madison University, is learning more about marketing when she gets to college. As a high school junior she enjoyed a challenging marketing project assigned to the marketing club students by teacher, Julie Cassetta. It took the group as far as Florida.

Sponaugles parents are John and Pam Sponaugle. Her older sister is Sarah. On their 100-acre farm, the Sponaugles keep four poultry houses and some 200 ewes.

Bradley Bennett, 13, from Weyers Cave, showed the supreme reserve grand champion in the single lamb show. It was a middleweight animal of 125 pounds. His parents are Barry and Deborah Bennett.

Dezirae Allman, 15, Dayton, had the supreme reserve grand champion lamb pair. Allman is a junior at Turner-Ashby High School. Phil and Roberta Allman are her parents.

The market lamb show was judged by J. C. Warfield of Marriottsville, Md.

"Our numbers were down," said show chairman, Dwight Newman, reporting the total lambs as 211. "But the quality was as good as weve ever had.

"We had a good show and a good sale. Maybe they did a quality job of selecting animals," Newman said of the 79 exhibitors.

Armentrout Steer Is Supreme Champion At Rockingham

GAY BROWNLEE
Virginia Correspondent

HARRISONBURG, Va. — At the Rockingham Co. Fair on Wednesday, Aug. 13, Caity Armentrout of Mt. Crawford had the supreme grand champion steer at the Rockingham Co. Fair. He weighed 1,185 pounds and was also lightweight division champion.

Armentrout was watching a professional baseball game on television when she was inspired to dub her steer "Dodger," because one of the teams playing was the Los Angeles Dodgers.

The 13-year old Armentrout commented about her steers award: "The judge said he is really complete. Its pretty cool."

The steer was purchased from Coassic Farm, Jackson Mill, W.Va.

It had been a very busy fair week for the Port Republic 4-H member and eighth grader at Montevideo Middle School. Including all the livestock shows, she exhibited two steers, three lambs, three hogs and one heifer.

Armentrout and her younger brother, Ethan live with their mother, Sheila Bowman on a homestead with assorted animals — even donkeys.

Nathan Coffman, a 2003 graduate of Spotswood High School and member of the Spotswood FFA Chapter, had the supreme reserve grand champion with a 1,305 pound steer.

Earlier, Coffman had showed the animal at the Va. State Fair in Richmond and also, at the Beef Expo in Harrisonburg.

Since its birth near Grottoes on the Begoon Farm of his grandparents, Jimmy and Barbara Begoon, Coffman had been with the steer.

Now a freshman at the Blue Ridge Community College, Coffmans parents are Greg and Tammy Coffman.

The show judge was J. P. Housner from Thomasville, Pa.

PMMB Announces September Class I Price

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — The Pennsylvania Milk Marketing Board (PMMB) announced the prices to be paid to Pennsyvlania dairy farmers for September Class I milk (beverage) as an average of $17.76 in the western areas of the Commonwealth, and an average of $18.25 in the central and eastern areas of the Commonwealth. These prices include the over-order premium of $1.65 per one hundred pounds of milk.

Farmers, whose milk production is pooled under a federal order, will receive a market-wide blend price based upon the value of all classes of milk. However, the price on their milk checks will vary as the component composition of a farmer's milk differs from the established benchmarks of 3.5 percent butterfat, 2.99 percent protein, and 5.69 percent other solids.

Lehigh Cooperative Extension Conducts Tune-Up Clinic

DEANNA CUNFER
Carbon Co. Correspondent

MERTZTOWN (Lehigh Co.) — A fall equipment tune-up clinic, complete with pig roast and sweet corn dinner, provided information for farmers about combines, headers, and sprayers.

Hosted by Mertztown farmers Dan Hunsicker and Jody Menzies, the clinic was a spin-off of the crop conferences conducted each winter by the southeast region of Penn State Cooperative Extension ag agents and sponsoring ag industries.

Several years ago the extension agents and ag dealers realized it was wiser to combine their educational meetings, which were essentially covering the same material, and the idea of crop conferences throughout the winter months has been quite successful.

As an added benefit, a planning committee of southeast region ag agents and ag industry thought they would provide a one evening tune-up clinic and treat those in attendance to a dinner of pig roast with country fresh sweet corn, limiting the attendance to 60 people. What was intended to be a one-night clinic filled so quickly it required a second night be scheduled. Both evening sessions were filled to capacity.

Each evening was divided into two one-hour educational sessions where you could select the combine of your choice — two John Deere or two Case IH — for one hour of tune-up instruction and then move onto separate half hour sessions on headers and sprayers.

The combines, headers, and sprayers used were either owned by hosts Hunsicker and Menzies, neighbors, or provided by participating dealers.

Sponsors of the evening were the Southeast Pennsylvania Crops Conferences and Bayer, BASF, Doebler's, DOW AgroSciences, FS - the Natural Resource, Martin Limestone, Monsanto, Penn State College of Ag Sciences, Pioneer, Syngenta and Timac USA, along with the Pennsylvania Department of Ag.

Those providing equipment and technical expertise were Adamstown Equipment Inc., Eckroth Equipment Inc., Hardi Inc., Hoober Inc., Kyle Henninger, Dan Hunsicker, Lehigh Ag Equipment Inc., MillerPro Inc. and Zimmerman Farm Service Inc.

In reviewing the combines and headers — either the JD or Case IH — that were at the clinic, the tech reps went over the basic items to check going into the fall harvest season. There were older models and new 2003 models of each brand to compare, and the technicians pointed out the improved features seen on the newer models that make operation easier and more efficient.

One of the main points that was stressed by those at both the combine and header sessions was how to set up the machine to prevent grain loss, and if you do notice a grain loss, how to determine where it is coming from.

While Hoober's representatives, Bob Sangery and Nelson Martin, service technicians; Gary Houseman, sales and Ken Diller, sales service were going over the 2003 Case IH axial flow 2388 they brought to the demonstration, they mentioned one of the first areas to check is the grain coming up the feeder house it often pushes in the center, and sometimes the corners of the door in the throat are pushed open, creating an area of grain loss.

They explained that if you notice a grain loss in the field, it doesn't necessarily mean the leak or problem is in the back of the combine — it could be in the front of the machine. The easiest and best thing to do is do a dead stop in the field and divide your machine mentally into three sections — front, middle, and back. Measure the length of the combine and visualize where the loss is occurring. Sometimes it is as easy as a clean out door that was never closed.

Over at the demonstration by Robert Ziegler, service manager; Dan Eckroth, owner/sales; and Bruce Schock, service department, of Eckroth Equipment Inc., Orefield, Ziegler was going over the 2206 6-row 30-inch Case IH corn head and pointing out areas where to look for loss of grain. An interesting fact that one farmer found interesting was that Ziegler recommended setting the two end rows of your corn head 2 inches higher than the others. That farmer said he was going to make that adjustment when he got home.

In reviewing the parts and operation of the sprayers represented at the clinic — MillerPro and Hardi — the technicians stressed the need to control accuracy and calibration for a good efficient application of spray material.

Before going into the field check various parts of your sprayer including the tips and nozzles. Each farming operation is different so there is no easy answer to that often heard question — "How long or how much can I spray with these nozzles?"

Ed Starzek, tech manager for Hardi Inc., was reviewing the Hardi Navigator 575 sprayer and said, "You can have the fanciest, newest sprayer with all the gadgets, but you want to keep the boom as stabilized as possible so make whatever adjustments possible to keep the boom steady."

He explained that if the booms on your sprayer are bouncing and waving or rocking you are not getting even distribution of spray material in the field.

When asked what point he would remember from the evening, Donald Fink of Germansville, Lehigh County, said there was a lot of information — some things that he knew and had forgotten and some new points to take home with him.

Steve Murphy, a farmer from Kresgeville in Monroe County, attended the session on the Case IH combine and the points he got from the session were — on the IH combine they brought up good points of how to set up from front to back — if don't have front end set up properly nothing else will work properly. You have to check from the header throughout the rest of the machine. You want the grain to come into the machine evenly. If you have problems, do a dead stop in the field and go over the machine to see how the grain lays inside the combine.

For his view of the clinic as a presenter, Roy Bassett, MillerPro Sales Rep, said he believes some had their eyes opened when he discussed how the farmers were spending more money than necessary if not able to calibrate their application other than by how fast they are covering the field. He also thinks most owners are not up on the new technology available with the newer sprayers and that if they are tuned in to the new technology, they can save on expenses and care for the soil.

Maryland Family Tops Swine Breeding At KILE

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — Family Farming was the theme at the Keystone International Livestock Breeding Swine Sale, Oct. 3 in the sale arena of the farm show complex.

The Weber family of Whitehall, Maryland, exhibited and sold the Champion Yorkshire Breeding Boar and high selling animal. The Champion boar sold for $2,800. The Webers own a 25-acre farm where they breed 12 Yorkshire sows to their three boars for 4-H and FFA breeding and market projects.

Owner Mike Weber has shown and sold his prize-winning swine for over 22 years at various shows throughout the state of Pennsylvania and Maryland. Weber, along with family members including wife Sarah and 15-month-old son Andrew, has also started a business selling boar semen to other breeders. He stated, "The new business helps to pay the feed bills. Without my family's help, it simply wouldn't happen. The animals that we are raising are what the Yorkshire industry needs."

Family farmers of 3D Stock Farms in Larwill, Indiana, also count on one another to operate their 500-sow farm. David, Donnie and Daryll Sheiss own and operate an 800-row crop farm where they breed hogs as well as brood cows using artificial insemination techniques.

3-D Stock Farms raise purebred Yorkshire, purebred Hampshire and Crossbred swine for club pigs. They also raise Shorthorns and Crossbred cattle for club calves.

Exhibiting at the World Pork Expo, Indiana State Fair, Oklahoma Fall Classic, Louisville Summer Type Conference and the Keystone International Livestock Exposition, David Sheiss stated that he enjoys exhibiting at the Keystone show because it is well run and very organized.

Pennsylvania Secretary of Agriculture, Dennis C Wolff, a family farm owner from Columbia County stated, "It's refreshing to see that family farmers are conveying the importance of farming to future generations and teaching them the value of the work they do. Hopefully, our children will grow to understand, appreciate and contribute to agribusiness — Pennsylvania's number one industry."

Penn State Cooperative Extension Capitol Region Dairy Team

Galen Kopp

DAIRY ANIMALS ARE ALSO BEEF ANIMALS

Galen Kopp
Extension Agent — Dairy/Livestock
Lebanon County

Dairy culling decisions are often defined by compelling forces that have historically been milk price, stall availability, and the cost and availability of replacement animals. Thus, profitable culling is often not recognized or practiced because it is viewed as a negative cost instead of a positive opportunity. And the animal removed is viewed as salvage with little value.

Nothing could be further from the truth. Much of the beef from cull cows is processed into ground beef. When mixed with fed beef trimmings, this product represents 43 percent of all beef consumed in this country.

But, there's more. Today, about half of the beef from dairy cull cows is processed and merchandised as whole-muscle cuts for food favorites such as fajitas, cheesesteaks, deli and fast-food roast beef, and marinated steaks.

It's A Human Health Issue

The way dairies approach their culling and treatment decisions has become a human health issue in perception and reality. Because of the public focus on food safety and animal health issues, packers are beginning to require producers to certify that they have followed FDA regulations concerning drug use and meat withdrawal as well as certifying that the animals were fed in accordance with the FDA ban on feeding ruminant-derived protein (meat and bone meal) to cattle or other ruminants.

Good managers recognize that the same management and culling practices that assure beef quality also contribute to dairy profitability. When voluntary culling decisions are put off, the result is more "forced" removals on the market. By then, substantial value to the beef industry and profit opportunities for the producer are lost. Plus, the animal poses a risk to consumer confidence.

Safeguard And Dairy Image

Expansion competition for limited replacements and the flexibility of modern dairy systems add to the prevalence of "forced" culls on the market. As physical constraints such as facility space become less compelling factors, the broader economic and image factors of keeping the marginal dairy cow become more compelling.

The low-milk or disease-compromised cow loses carcass value daily as she either becomes too fat, too thin, or more lame. The decision to keep or cull an animal should include assessing her environmental cost to the land-limited operation and the public image her deteriorated market condition conveys about the dairy and beef industries.

Recognize Profitable Culling

Culling and replacement are critical management areas, accounting for 20 to 25 percent of the operating costs of a dairy second only to feed costs. Returns from the sale of cull cows represent 4 percent of total returns for the average dairy operation, according to statistics from the 1999 National Market Cow and Bull Quality Audit.

A comprehensive, timely approach to culling, which results in more voluntary decisions and fewer "forced" removals, has been shown to increase net returns per cow for the entire dairy herd.

"Culling is a complex decision, and we often do not recognize profitable culling," said Dr. David Gallagan, associate professor, animal health economics, University of Pennsylvania New Bolton Center. "The gray zone cow in a milking herd can be as costly as any subclinical disease. Every day, a cow faces that decision, and every day the producer intentionally or nonintentionally makes that decision. We want to step back and look at this as a new disease — the failure to make the right decision to maintain the right combination of cows in production."

Dairy animals eventually do become beef animals. Quality defects such as bruising, abscesses, inflammation, and condemnation have a pervasive negative effect on the price that beef processors can pay for cows. According to the 1999 Quality Audit, approximately 2 percent of all slaughter cows are condemned by USDA. But, among the very thin and disabled cows, condemnation loss is 40 percent.

Make Decisions Early

These losses can be prevented by culling animals with health conditions earlier. Animals that become disabled, have terminal conditions, or have not passed their treatment meat residue withdrawal period must be euthanized, not marketed.

It's difficult to remove the emotional aspects that underlay these decisions. Marketing cows before that certain loss of body weight is important, but it means you're making the decision before you've given up hope on her.

Pay Attention To Condition

Selling the marginal cow before she becomes too thin benefits the dairy producer, the beef packer, and the consumer. Cows in the 2.5 to 3.0 body condition score (BCS) range produce the most valuable carcasses for beef processing. As cows become thinner and drop below 2.5, they become weaker and are more likely to become disabled during transit. They are also more likely to incur substantial losses from bruising, abscesses, inflammation, and condemnation.

Herd studies indicate that a high percentage of culls are marketed in early lactation, many of them disease-compromised "forced" removals. According to the 1999 Quality Audit, 72.5 percent of dairy cull cows had inadequate muscling and 5.4 percent of all dairy cull cows were in a serious negative energy balance with insufficient body condition scores of 1.

These extremes can be prevented. Through better management and timely culling, dairy producers can reap an additional 5 percent in cull cow income — without adding costs to the operation.

Double Benefits, Not Losses

Just as sound nutritional management improves the overall health and performance of the milking animal, it also improves her value as a beef animal. The tough but critical part is making the voluntary decision before body condition deteriorates.

In beef value alone, timely culling increases producer revenue in two ways — by weight (pounds) and by value (per pound). Better body condition puts the animal into a more valuable beef processing class. The double benefit is a difference of $144 between the timely decision and the "forced" removal 30 days later.

Think of it this way. That $144 difference based on condition alone is equivalent to 1,100 pounds of $13 milk. Now include the cost to keep her milking, and she would have to make 60 pounds a day for the next 30 days to offset declining beef value.

When low milk cows are kept past break-even, or disease-compromised cows are kept until they are overtly biologically broken, they incur double losses for the dairy. They are not putting income back into the operation, and they are taking up space that a more productive animal could be using. Even the apparently healthy low milk cow can quickly lose value as she gains weight instead of making milk with the energy she consumes.

The per-pound beef value diminishes rapidly as cows approach BCS 4 and 5. "With our cows, we've mainly learned not to hold heavier animals quite as long," said Jeff Grove. Jeff and his brother Jay milk 175 cows near Shippensburg. They pay attention to why cull cows bring the prices they do.

Producers benefit when they view culling decisions as a positive, productive, and profitable function of dairy management — and view themselves as contributors of valued beef products instead of salvage price-takers.

Workshops Set For Custom Operators

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — What kinds of educational opportunities do Pennsylvania's custom agricultural operators need to prosper?

That is the question Penn State Cooperative Extension will be posing at a series of workshops offered around the state, starting in November.

Custom operators from across Pennsylvania are invited to attend one of the workshops to offer their input on the types of educational programming they desire from Penn State Cooperative Extension.

"This is the custom operators' opportunity to be heard," explained Sarah Roth, Extension associate in business management with the Dairy Alliance.

The workshops are designed to bring together custom operators for the purposes of education and social interaction with their industry peers.

The series of workshops will focus on gathering and assessing the educational and professional needs of Pennsylvania's custom operators through roundtable discussion.

There will be at least one guest speaker at each workshop who will share information on a relevant topic, such as business planning.

The workshops are planned in the following counties on these dates and times:

- Bradford County: Nov. 10, Bradford County Extension Office, Towanda, 10 a.m.-2 p.m. Call (570) 265-2896 to register. Registration fee: $10 per person, payable at the door.
- Franklin County: Nov. 24, The Lighthouse Restaurant, Chambersburg, 7 p.m.-9 p.m. Call (717) 263-9226 to register. Deadline to register is Nov. 19. Registration fee: $10 per person, payable at the door.
- Berks County: Dec. 3, Berks County Ag Center, Leesport, 7 p.m.-9:30 p.m. Call (610) 378-1327 to register. Registration fee: $10 per person, payable at the door.
- Lancaster County: Jan. 20, 2004, Lancaster DHIA Center, Manheim, 7 p.m.- 9 p.m. Call (717) 840-7408 to register. Registration fee: $10 per person, payable at the door.

In addition to the workshops, a custom operators database can be found on Penn State's Farm Management website: http://farmmanagement.aers.psu.edu.

The database connects producers with custom operators, who post information about their businesses on the site.

For more information about services for custom operators, contact Roth at (814) 863-8645, via e-mail at: SarahRoth@psu.edu or visit these websites:www.dairyalliance.org or http://farmmanagement.aers.psu.edu.

Rain And More Rain Falls At Hog Show

GAY BROWNLEE
Virginia Correspondent

HARRISONBURG, Va. — On Monday, Aug. 11, the featured event at the Rockingham Co. Fair was the Market Swine Show with an expected number of 4-H and FFA supporters attending the event.

But attendance shot up fast when the rain descended in torrents and — like a scene from Noahs ark — sopping fairgoers needing a dry place, immediately, overflowed the interconnected barns and show arena. By then, being sheltered with all manner of livestock species was preferable to open air fair attractions in a downpour that continued all evening.

Caity Armentrout, 13, of Mount Crawford, heard the judge — Dr. Cynthia Wood from Virginia Tech — announce the supreme grand champion market hog was her own "Barney."

Armentrout said that when he came to their farm amongst a group of eight pigs, it turned out he was the only male. That's why Barney seemed a good name for him.

"Out of eight pigs he was the only guy," she said.

Barney was also the shows heavyweight champion.

At age five, young Armentrout started breaking into showing animals, like her mother, Sheila Bowman, had done. The teenager was following in her mom's footsteps.

Amid a menagerie of livestock and domestic animals, Armentrout and Ethan, her 11-year old brother live in Mount Crawford with their mother.

Sarah Secrist, 15, McGaheysville, had the reserve supreme grand champion hog. In the heavyweight division it was awarded reserve grand champion honors.

The Mountain View 4-H member, with three lambs, three hogs and two steers, brought eight animals to the fair.

A sophomore at the Spotswood High School, Secrist is Darius and Darlene Secrists daughter.

Bradley Bennett, 13, showed the swine duo that took supreme grand champion honors in the Pair of Hogs show. He is the son of Barry and Debbie Bennett of Weyers Cave.

The hog pairs reserve supreme grand champion went to Nathan Coffmans hogs. Coffman, 18, is a Grottoes resident and a freshman at the Blue Ridge Community College. His parents are Greg and Tammy Coffman.

Some 118 hogs and 53 exhibitors participated in the show.

Boars, Gilts Sold At PDA's New Center

PENNSYLVANIA FURNACE (Huntingdon Co.) — The Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture (PDA) has announced the results of the 28th Annual Performance Tested Boar Sale and 1st Performance Tested Gilt Sale at the new Samuel E. Hayes Jr. Livestock Evaluation Center.

The facility's ribbon cutting ceremony was conducted before the sale, Aug. 20. Dennis C. Wolfe, Secretary of Agriculture, was on hand and addressed the huge crowd in attendance. He offered some insight into Pennsylvania's commitment in assisting production agriculture.

The 26 boars sold averaging $413 per head. In the sale were 17 Yorkshire boars, 4 Duroc boars, 4 Crossbred boars, and 1 Hampshire boar.

The top indexing boar was a Yorkshire consigned by Neutzel Yorkshires of Seven Valleys, and was sold to Jeanne Beyer and James Mathis for $1000. This boar has an average daily gain of 2.81 pounds per day and an adjusted loin eye area of 8.47 inches. The second highest selling Yorkshire owned by Thomas Arnold of Lebanon sold for $500 to Rhoads Brothers Farm.

The highest indexing Duroc Boar consigned by Leon Arnold of Lebanon sold to Kenneth Jones for $800. This boar had an average daily gain of 2.36 pounds per day and an adjusted loin eye area of 6.29 inches. The highest selling crossbred boar came from David A. Reinecker of York Springs, and the single Hampshire boar came from Greg Innerst of Red Lion.

The 10 gilts, consisting of 9 Yorkshire gilts and 1 Crossbred gilt, averaging $270 per head. The highest indexing gilt was owned by Wayne E. Brothers of Connelsville and sold for $300 to Glenn F. Speer. The highest selling gilt was consigned by Henry Halloway of Darlington, Md., and sold to Neutzel Yorkshires for $425.

The performance test evaluates growth, average daily gain, weight per day of age, and ultrasonically scanned loin eye and fat thickness scans. With this information a producer and buyer can pick a boar or gilt, which contains growth and muscling characteristics which would be more beneficial to their operation. Furthering these economically characteristics within the industry creates a better product to the consumer and a more profitable scenario for the producer.

In addition to hogs, the PDA hosts performance tests for cattle, sheep, and goats. For information on the livestock performance tests or any other programs at the evaluation center, contact Glenn Eberly, director, at (814) 238-2527 or e-mail: geberly@state.pa.us.

Franklin Hog Farm Manager

is written, has some limitations. Farmers who import manure, for example, are required to keep a nutrient balance sheet, but aren't necessarily required to have a full nutrient management plan.

"There is a little bit of a loophole there because some farmers keep better track (of imported manure) than others," he said. "On the other hand, just because they have a nutrient management plan doesn't mean they're using it."

Manure importer regulations are being revised for the new Nutrient Management Act.

Tom Chiou of Taiwan owns Franklin Hog Farm, which employs 10 people in the farrow-to-feeder operation. He also owns a hog finishing operation, Timber Ridge Farm, in Fulton County.

Chiou had been a hog producer in Taiwan, exporting much of his pork to Japan. Expansion took him to south central Pennsylvania in 1996.

In 1997, foot-and-mouth disease in Taiwan curtailed pork exports.

According to Sollenberger, the expansion here made sense for those reasons, and because Chiou had been importing about 90 percent of his feed from the U.S.

About 1,300 pigs a week are weaned on the 2,800-sow operation, and are moved to a "detached nursery" barn where they are raised to feeder age. The nursery is separate from the farrowing barn and two gestation barns for health reasons.

Six farmers from the area finish about 40 percent of the hogs on a contract basis, the rest being finished by Chiou's operation in Fulton County.

These 6-day-old pigs like to lie on the heat pad provided in the farrowing crate. By helping to keep them away from the sow except at feeding times, the pad helps prevent the piglets from being crushed.

Franklin Hog Farm uses artificial insemination (AI), with semen collected from boars on the farm. All the AI work is done by employees.

Replacement gilts are raised on the farm. Except for the occasional new crop of boars being brought in, "it's basically a closed herd," Sollenberger said.

The farm uses patented hog genetics that include Landrace/Yorkshire sows, pure or crossbred Hampshire and/or Duroc boars, and Pietrain terminal sires.

Gehl Offers New Choices

WEST BEND, Wis. — Gehl Company offers farmers additional material handling solutions with the introduction of new All-Wheel-Steer Loaders to their agricultural product line.

Three models, available in either standard or telescopic boom configurations, offer a combination of power and versatiblity.

The exclusive All-Wheel-Steer (AWS) design features unmatched maneuverability and consistent load capacities throughout the steering cycle for maximum production. Because of their compact size and superior steering angles, the Gehl AWS Loaders operate better in confined spaces than articulated machines. Because the center-of-gravity remains the same during the steering cycle, load capacities do not change while turning.

Gehl's AWS Loaders are built for power. Operating weights range from 9,480 to 16,500 pounds with bucket capacities from 1.1 to 1.5 cubic yards. Diesel engines are standard on all models.

Accounting Workshop Set For Dairy Producers

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — Penn State Dairy Alliance asks: "Are you getting the most out of your information systems?"

To help producers make more effective and profitable decisions for their operations, Dairy Alliance is offering the program "Accounting Methods for Progressive Dairies" Nov. 4-5 at the Penn State Harrisburg campus. The workshop is sponsored in partnership with Miller and Miller Certified Public Accountants, LLP and Red Wing Software Company.

"Having accurate and timely data to base decisions on is critical to operating a profitable business," noted Bradley Hilty, information specialist with Dairy Alliance.

The two-day program is an interactive hands-on workshop to help dairy producers and accountants implement standardized procedures in their accounting programs to improve the quality of information provided for decision making.

The program is designed for producers, accountants, and financial officers of progressive dairy businesses. However, any producer of any agricultural commodity will benefit from attending this workshop. Participants may attend one or both days, depending on their needs.

Instructors include Bradley Hilty, Michael Peachey, Matthew M. Hilton, Julie Strain of Red Wing Software, and Judy Kemeny, a private consultant in accounting and business management.

The registration fee is $150 for one day and $275 for both days. The cost includes lunch. A reduced rate is available for farms sending more than one person. The one-day rate is $50 per each additional participant. The two-day rate is $85. Pre-registration is required by Oct. 24.

For more information or to register, contact Michele Moyer at (888) 373-7232 or e-mail mcm14@psu.edu.

N.J. Ag Secretary Urges Vote For More Preservation

TRENTON, N.J. — Agriculture Secretary Charles M. Kuperus recently anounced the preservation of the prime 162-acre Evans Farm in Locktown, Hunterdon County, and highlighted the importance of Public Question #1 on the Nov. 4 ballot, which would boost the availability of preservation funding.

"The preservation of the Evans farm builds on the local, county and state partnership effort to protect this critical farmland area," said Secretary Kuperus. "To date, we've preserved more than 112,000 acres of farmland statewide. In November, voters have an important opportunity to build on that success to save even more farms, as well as protect additional open space and upgrade our community parks."

Approval of Public Question #1 on Nov. 4 would make an additional $150 million available to preserve open space and farmland, and to improve community parks throughout New Jersey. The referendum proposes to increase the total amount of bonds issued by the Garden State Preservation Trust from $1 billion to $1.15 billion. The increased bonding would place no additional costs on New Jersey taxpayers. Approval of this question could provide up to $30 million to save farmland in the Highlands region, which covers part of Hunterdon County.

10% off All Our Seed*

*Cereal Rye excluded from offer

Premium Forage is One of the Keys to Profitability

At King's AgriSeeds we are focused on forage quality. We understand the dairy economy has been challenged recently, and hope and pray for a strong recovery. To help lower our inventories and to give you a bargain, we are offering 10% off all products (except cereal rye) until Oct. 31st. This is a cash and carry offer, but also includes early order discounts for seed that we don't have in inventory, such as our corn hybrids. We carry over 70 premium varieties representing 30 species. We use our small dairy and many of our dealers' farms to test our varieties and mixtures.

Our grasses and clovers literally come from around the world, but our corns, alfalfas, and sorghum sudans are all bred in the US. We believe that dairy farmers in our area can remain competitive. High quality forages are one crucial piece of dairy farm profitablity. We have been working with grazing for 10 years, and with good management, it almost always has a positive impact.

Union Mill Acres Showcases Colorful Ornamental Bounty

LOU ANN GOOD
Food And Family Features Editor

ELIZABETHTOWN (Lancaster Co.) — A splendid display of fall's bounty greets motorists traveling Elizabethtown Road between Manheim and Elizabethtown.

Incorporating an old stone mill and wooden barn to showcase their farm's bounty, Keith and Melanie Martin and their four children suffuse creativity and fun into the family operation.

Although Melanie grew up at Union Mill Acres, her parents did not farm, but rented out the 35 acres. When Melanie and her husband took over the farm in 1999, their dream was to find a viable operation where they could work together as a family.

Keith had grown up on a poultry layer farm. His dad was a DHIA technician, and Keith followed his dad's career path. Keith continues to work as a DHIA technician and finds the hours blend well into farming on the side.

Hours as a DHIA technician varies, but Keith said he mostly works from 4:30 a.m. until 10:30 a.m. Then he works on the farm until about 3- to 4 p.m. went he returns to DHIA work until about 7 p.m.

The Martins' transition into farming ornamentals began when Melanie fashioned corn dolls from Indian corn husks. That was a viable market when she first started, but customers purchasing desires change. When the demand for corn dolls dwindled, the couple sold their excess of Indian corn at Green Dragon market for eight weeks during the fall season.

"We started experimenting by growing anything a bit out of the ordinary," Keith said of looking for other items to add to Indian corn.

What began as a half acre of tomatoes and Indian corn has progressed into six acres of fall ornamentals and one acre of growing watermelon and cantaloupe. This year, the Martins also grew 1,000 mums.

"I guess I didn't read enough in the beginning," Keith said of learning by trial and error the best method for growing Indian corn.

In the beginning, he planted Indian corn by using the same method as planting field corn.

"The first year, we didn't get too much," he said. Keith learned that Indian corn kernels should be planted only half as close as field corn.

Indian corn must also be sprayed to eliminate worms, which can destroy the husk so desired by those who want to display the corn.

Growing ornamentals is labor intensive. The Indian corn must be picked by hand, the husks pulled back, and several ears tied together in a bunch.

Pumpkins, squash, and gourds are also harvested by hand. The gourds are planted between 90-120 days, depending on variety, before desired harvest. Everything is planted by seed into flats and transplanted during the third week of growing.

In addition to working together as a family, the Martins also hire neighbors and Amish teen-agers to help harvest.

Melanie's creativity abounds when preparing the roadside displays. Her husband fashioned a rustic roadside stand using weathered barn wood and salvaged slate. Edible pumpkins

At Union Mill Acres, more than 20 varieties of pumpkins, squash, and gourds are heaped inside this antique manure spreader. Although only 2 years old, Hannah likes to sell pumpkins, gourds, and ornamental corn at the roadside stand. Her dad fashioned the rustic stand from salvaged slate from the house roof and weathered barn wood. This is only a small part of the display that includes numerous varieties of ornamentals displayed inside the wooden barn and the exterior of the old mill on the property.

Pumpkins and gourds come in all shapes, sizes, and colors at Union Mill Acres. Edible and non-edible varieties are separated and clearly labeled for shoppers to identify. Daniel and Sarah help with harvesting and selling on their parents' 35-acre farm, 3272 Elizabethtown Road, Elizabethtown.

and squash are exhibited inside the wooden drive-through barn. The old stone walls of the mill provide an eye-appealing backdrop to mounds of pumpkins, squash, and gourds in all colors and varieties.

Orange pumpkins of all sizes are stacked in a massive 10-feet tall pyramid.

Melanie separates the edible pumpkins and squash from the ornamentals, which are clearly labeled for browsing customers to identify.

"Anything called pumpkin and squash is edible. The gourds are not," Melanie said.

Keith and daughter Sarah load the wagon with pumpkins that hired help has picked from the vine.

Customers often intersperse edible and non-edible ornamentals for display, but some want only edible varieties and others stick to ornamentals.

In recent years, many edible varieties have been introduced to the market. These include blue, red, and green pumpkin and squash varieties.

The grist mill deeds go back to 1850s, but it is believed to being even older. The mill operation was stopped in the late 1800s.

A flood in 1936 wiped out the head race, so the mill equipment was sold. The waterwheel has disintegrated over the years. A flood in 1986 destroyed the stone tail race, which featured an underground stone arch. For many years, Elias Groff operated a recycled feed bag operation inside the mill.

The Martins use the mill for storage, and a brother-in-law operates a woodworking shop on the third floor of the mill.

"We have dreams of turning the mill into a bed and breakfast," Melanie said. "We have sort of an old MacDonald's farm here, which is ideal for families to visit. But the bed and breakfast idea will need to wait until the children are a bit older.

The Martins have four children, Moses, 8 months; Hannah, 2; Daniel, 4; and Sarah, 6.

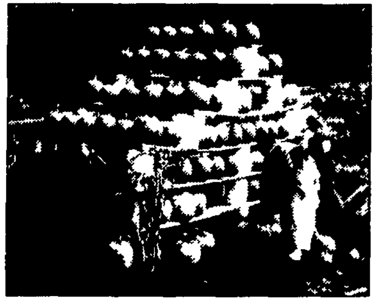
The children meander around outside, helping a bit and exploring the many interests abounding on the farm, while their parents fulfill the farm's duties. Sarah said their animal collection includes two heifers, 50 chickens (Rhode Island Reds), several Nubian goats, four sheep, one dog, and about 15 cats.

Sarah helps gather the eggs from the free-range chickens. These eggs are also sold at the roadside stand.

The original house is believed to have been built in the 1700s. Since then, additions have been added to the house.

Melanie also makes goat milk soap from the goats that are milked on the farm. She sells the soap at Green Dragon and to retail markets.

"Part of the reason we strive to build up the farm income is so both parents can be home with our children. We want to be able to work side by side with them and teach them Godly values," Keith said.



Customers, the Stoltzfus family, choose orange pumpkins from the 10-foot tall pyramid.

In addition to selling by the roadside, the Martins also wholesale to five markets and sell at Green Dragon market for several weeks.

"We prefer retailing," Melanie said. "We enjoy meeting customers and building up the trade. But we wouldn't be able to do any of this without God. He sends the rain, sunshine — and the energy needed."

Union Mill Acres is located at 3272 Elizabethtown Rd., Elizabethtown.

On Being a Farm Wife

(and other hazards)

Joyce Bupp

You could call it Transition Time.

But, Indian Summer sounds so much more poetic.

Regardless of what you call these fleeting weeks of mid-October, they whiz by with frightening speed. And, like the noisy finale of a fireworks display, Indian summer bursts with bright explosions of color, which quickly fade and float silently back to earth.

"Swamp" maples that grow wild in the meadow are firing up their displays of brilliant crimson-orange. Collectively, at least, that's what color they appear to be. Studied individually, though, the leaves are as distinct in appearance as single people in a crowd of thousands.

Each leaf, smaller than some species but with the distinctive maple-leaf shape, may have splotches of green and spotches of red. Coloration may follow the veining. Or maybe not. Shaded variations of the leaves colorings abound in an array of patterns, each one unique as individual snowflakes.

Kicking along through these colorful leaf fallouts has always been distracting. Their delicate beauty begs to be scooped up by the handfuls, to study the individual patterns and intricate lacings of color. Every year, I promise myself to try to fashion their loveliness into something to preserve them with more permanence — a bookmarker, placement, or notecards. I've even gotten so far as to press them between pages of a catalog. Where they inevitably get . lost, forgotten and dried up.

Oh well, it's a good thought, anyway.

Other species are equally pretty, like the demure maroon dogwoods, their subtleness accented with flame-red, berry-like seeds. Norway maples, on the other hand, are stunning show stoppers with their giant spreading canopies of golden yellow, glowing against a clear blue sky.

But brilliant Indian summer color is not selectively granted to the most desirable plant species.

Vining Virginia creeper, attractive in a confined spot, instead runs rampant, wild, and uncontained. It tracks long fingers of cheery red up the sides of old barns and weaves through fences. Competing for attention in colorful brilliance are indestructible stands of sumac.

Tawny, fluffy heads of goldenrod wave in the breeze from abandoned meadows and weedy roadside patches. Plus, in, around and through any or all of the above is likely poking clinging vines bearing bright yellow "leaves of three, let them be" poison ivy.

It's always seemed a little cockeyed to me that these most pesty weeds turn some of the most beautiful stunning fall colors? Is that some sort of in-your-face statement by Mother Nature?

Thick, early morning fog frequently hangs over the meadow on our Indian summer days, cloaking the sun in a nebulous mystic aura as it tries to burn off the mist. Often, it is mid-to-late morning before the fog dissipates. Other days, a vague haziness veils the colors of our world even through the afternoon.

Indian sumer full moons rise up looking like the proverbial round orange cheese, inching their way above the eastern horizon. The warm afternoon temperatures drop in the other direction as fast as the moon climbs heavenward. Its orange gives way to bright white, a spotlight in the night sky sparkling with rhinestone stars.

These nights, even more beautiful than most, beckon Derra Dog and I to walk a little extra distance. A large flock of geese, spending recent nights on the ridge fields, honk and chatter in the darkness. Moonlight reflects in ripples across the ponds, and a great blue heron flaps off in a huff as we get too near its roosting tree near the frog pond. As Derra "woofs" and trots up the hill, deer silhouettes bound over the top of the hill.

All too soon, this pleasant interlude will end. Leaf explosions will disappear into the woodland floors and the geese will move on. Previews we had earlier of cold nights and frosty mornings will become the norm. And the golden glow of Indian summer will fade to somber browns.

Let's savor ever moment of it we can.

Kids And Money A Parents' Curse Or Blessing?

Parents, do you wonder where your children learn to handle money?

Go to the nearest mirror and take a good look.

Our children learn money management skills over a period of years by watching how others, especially we parents, spend and save. They also learn by having first-hand experience with money.

Whatever the age of your children, it's not too early or too late to teach and encourage them to spend and save wisely and to be disciplined about money.

Parents' attitudes about money stem from their families. What did money mean to you as you were growing up? Was money a tool to support the family or the driving force of its existence? Was it used to hurt or to show love without using the words, "I love you"?

As a parent, you can decide if the values you learned in your family were healthy values or not. If they were not, you are in the driver's seat to make the necessary changes in your family so there is a more healthy attitude about money from this day on.

First of all, at what age do you think children are aware of money or begin to grasp its concept? Age six or seven? No, the real answer at age three!

Scary, isn't it, that a three-year-old begins to learn about money!

Think about how television sells to children. How much television does your three year old watch? Also, think how many times the topic of money creeps into family conversations even when the conversation didn't start out that way.

The one thing we, as parents, need to realize is that whatever our own income — be it meager or not so meager— we have a major teaching role to play in teaching our children healthy attitudes about money. Even more critical is that we have a major role to prepare our children to be good money managers for the sake of their own future.

So, where do you begin with these young, impressionable "little consumers"?

One way to begin is to think about giving an allowance. Give your child a regular allowance in denominations that make it easy to save. A $5 allowance, in $1 bills, makes it easy to put $1 in savings. Give a weekly sum at ages five or six. As your child gets older, increase the sum to include school expenses, entertainment, clothes, and so forth. A rule of thumb for a weekly allowance is up to $1 for each year of age. Earnings need to be large enough so children stay interested but not too large that it is over indulgent. Remember that a set sum always should go into a savings.

Experts disagree on whether or not parents should withhold an allowance as a punishment or tie it to the chores a child performed. Some feel allowances, like a salary, should be paid consistently so a child learns to budget. Others insist a child perform chores as a member of the family, not because he or she will be paid. And when there is a need to discipline, take away other privileges, not the allowance.

The other viewpoint no work, no pay— of tying allowances to completed tasks has a number of supporters. Payment hinges on completion of the work. In addition, children are expected to do other duties as members of the family. A simple "thank you" is the reward.

Still others give a weekly sum to young children and a monthly cash outlay to teens. The important point is to enforce that when the money is gone, it is gone. Parents do not bail out the spender.

So, you see there are many avenues and approaches to beginning to teach your children about money. One thing for sure is that you, as the parent along with your child, need to discuss the arrangement that will work best. There's no right or wrong way to teach children about money, as long as the method is consistent, clear and workable.

If one method doesn't work, try another approach. Allow children to learn by mistakes and by successes. Encourage and praise rather than criticize.

Don't forget to contact your local Cooperative Extension Office for some additional help or literature on money and kids.

Gail McPherson, Maple Lawn Farms, New Park, writes that The Eight-Great Apple Pie is a fool-proof way to make the all-American dessert.

Featured Recipe

Apples and pears add flavor, nutrition, and color to your menus. In-season fruit is especially flavorful this time of the year.

Some people ask what is the best apple to use to make a pie. Gail McPherson, Maple Lawn Farms, New Park, suggests using one apple from the following eight varieties: York Imperial, McIntosh, Fuji, Mutsu, Granny Smith, Rome, Stayman, and Empire.

"The Eight Great Apple Pie is a foolproof way to make the all-American dessert," Gail writes.

She recommends following her easy recipe as follows:

THE EIGHT GREAT APPLE PIE

Preheat oven to 350 degrees.

Select one apple from the following eight varieties: York Imperial, McIntosh, Fuji, Mutsu, Granny Smith, Rome, Stayman, and Empire.

Slice the apples in thin, bite-sized wedges. Place in bowl and mix well until the varieties have blended. Arrange the slices in your favorite pastry pie or graham cracker crust.

Spices and sugar are optional. "You don't need to add any spices or anything. The flavors co-mingle when you bake them,' Gail said.

Bake for 50-60 minutes while the natural goodness and flavors of the apples blend together. Serve warm with ice cream.

APPLE MEAT LOAF

2 cups apples, finely chopped
2½ pounds ground beef
1½ cups stuffing mix
1 large onion, minced
3 tablespoons prepared horseradish
3 eggs
¼ cup ketchup
2 tablespoons prepared mustard
2 teaspoons salt

Combine all ingredients, mixing thoroughly. Pack into greased loaf pan 8×3-inch and bake at 350 degrees for 1 hour and 15 minutes.

LOST STREAM MAP

The STREAM MAP OF PENNSYLVANIA was completed in 1965 after a thirty-year effort by Howard Higbee, a former Penn State Professor.

The map is known as the LOST STREAM MAP to some anglers

Professor Higbee succeeded in creating a map of the highest detail possible.. a map that shows every stream and lake He painstakingly plotted by hand the location of 45,000 miles of streams onto a 3 by 5 foot map

The map sold extremely well--until it was lost several years later Incredibly, the printer entrusted with the original drawing and printing plates declared bankruptcy, then carelessly hauled Higbee's 30 years of work to a landfill

The few remaining dog-eared copies became a prized fisherman's possession Professor Higbee was offered $400 for one of his last maps And state agencies were forced to keep their copies under lock and key

Experts told Professor Higbee that reprints were impossible, because the maps were printed in non-photographic blue

Then, in 1991, at the age of 91, Howard Higbee's dream came true Computers made it possible to reprint the map Howard said, "I never thought I'd live to see this day"

Professor Higbee's maps are the first and only highly detailed maps of their kind.

Elderberry Wine

Place berries in a pan. Add enough water to prevent scorching, but bring to a boil only a few minutes. Strain through a cheesecloth. Add four cups sugar for each five cups berry juice. Let stand in a cool place. Skim liquid daily until clear. When bubbles stop rising to the top, the wine is ready to bottle.

ANSWER — Thanks to Josephine Matenus, Dallas, for sending in this recipe to use garden produce. She writes this is a traditional salad served in Germany for Christmas.

1 small head red cabbage
2 cups boiling water
¾ cup vegetable oil
2 tablespoons wine vinegar
1 tablespoon sugar
½ teaspoon monosodium glutamate
½ onion, coarsely chopped

Remove outer leaves. Cut cabbage into quarters. Place in large bowl. Pour boiling water over cabbage. Let stand about two minutes to scald cabbage.

Meanwhile, put remaining ingredients in blender and blend until smooth. Drain water from cabbage. Add dressing and mix well. Put a plate on top of bowl and weight with heavy object. Let cabbage stand overnight. It doesn't need to be refrigerated. Makes 4-6 servings.

New Jersey Youth Is Mix-It-With-Milk Contest Winner

PHILADELPHIA — A Princeton, N.J., sixth-grader concocted her own recipe for success and was selected as a national winner in the monthly Mix It With Milk 'n Jell-O contest.

Jessica Delaney, the 11-year-old daughter of Devon Delaney, Princeton, submitted her winning recipe, "Polar Bear in a Snowstorm." Her entry was among 655 recipes submitted nationwide in the Mix It With Milk 'n Jell-O contest for the month of July. The theme was "Summer Chillin'."

Jessica, who attends John Witherspoon Middle School in Princeton, created the idea using her favorite ingredients, especially cinnamon. The white-colored drink with flecks of cinnamon is like "looking for a polar bear in a snowstorm," a favorite Delaney family saying.

For her winning entry, Jessica receives $1,000, a Jell-O prize pack and a trip for two to New York City to compete against other monthly winners in a "Milk Mix Off" in November. The grand-prize winner of the "Milk Mix Off" will walk away with a $10,000 college scholarship and year's supply of Jell-O.

The Mix It With Milk 'n Jell-O promotion was created to encourage kids to drink more milk by jazzing up regular milk with a multitude of flavors. Kids today are in a calcium crisis and often fail to meet the daily calcium recommendation of 800 milligrams for ages 4-8 and 1,300 milligrams for pre-teens and teens. Milk makes it easy for kids to get the bone-building calcium and other nutrients their growing bodies need.

Mid-Atlantic Dairy Association staff members handed out brochures that featured various milk drink recipes and provided details of the Mix It With Milk 'n Jell-O contest.

Polar Bear in a Snowstorm

1 cup cold milk
2 tablespoons Vanilla Jell-O Pudding
1 cup crushed ice
½ teaspoon cinnamon

Place milk, pudding and ice in a blender and blend until smooth. Pour one-half of the mixture into a tall glass and top with the cinnamon. Add the remainder of the drink and top with remaining cinnamon.

State Queen Cassie Hay Crowns Somerset Fair Queen

SANDRA LEPLEY
Somerset Co. Correspondent

MEYERSDALE (Somerset Co.) — State Fair Queen Cassie Hay of Berlin crowned the new Somerset County Fair Queen Kayla Schrock of Berlin at this year's queen contest at the Somerset County Fair in Meyersdale.

Schrock is the 17-year-old daughter of Ronald and Michelle Schrock of Berlin and a member of Mountain Top 4-H Club.

Along with her crown, Schrock received a $1,000 scholarship award. She plans to attend Penn State University.

Competing for this year's title were nine young women, who had an interest in fair activities. They included Amy Fullerton of Meyersdale, Rose Goodwin of Stoystown, Valerie Hay of Friedens, Kate Lynn Patterson of Stoystown, Brittney Rugg of Windber, Deidra Smith of Fairhope, Jade Wareham of Rockwood, and Kimberly Yoder of Meyersdale.

Deidra Smith, the 19-year-old daughter of Dwight and Gail Smith of Fairhope, won first runner-up and a $300 cash scholarship from Steel City Amusements. Smith also won the Speech Award and $100 cash award from the Somerset County Fair Board for scoring the highest on the speech entitled "Why You Should Come to My Fair."

Amy Fullerton, the 18-year-old daughter of Jack and Darlene Fullerton of Meyersdale, won second runner-up and a $250 cash award sponsored by Animal Medical Center in Somerset.

Rose Goodwin, daughter of Bill and Nancy Goodwin of Stoystown, won the Promenade Award and a $100 savings bond from Citizen's National Bank in Meyersdale.

Jade Wareham, the 18-year-old daughter of Dennis and Nina Sue Wareham of Rockwood, won the interview award and $100 cash from the Somerset County Fair Board for scoring the highest in the interview portion of the contest.

This year's Somerset County Fair Queen Kayla Schrock, left, of Berlin is crowned by last year's Somerset County Fair Queen Cassie Hay of Berlin. Hay is also state fair queen and follows in the footsteps of four Somerset County fair queens who went on to win the state title.

Ironically, Schrock succinctly follows four former Mountain Top 4-H club members in winning the fair queen crown, including 2002 Queen Cassie Hay, 2001 Queen Erika Thompson, and 2000 Queen Melissa Schrock, a sister of Kayla.

Manheim Farm Show Wraps Up Final Fair Fling

Stealing the show is the youngest sheep exhibitor, who makes certain the lamb is standing correctly. Two-year-old Sierre Zimmerman, daughter of Sarah and Jay Zimmerman, Reinholds, won the nonserious sheep showing event.

LOU ANN GOOD
Food And Family Features Editor

MANHEIM (Lancaster Co.) — Showing sheep may last for hours, but the event sure wasn't boring at the Manheim Community Farm Show last week.

To lighten the atmosphere between showing breeding and market lambs, the final fair of the season interspersed non-serious showmanship competition.

Parents and toddlers entered the show ring to mimic the requirements judges look for in serious showmanship. Forget showmanship garb, there was Eugene Bollinger in swim trunks and lounging on a beach chair while showing a market lamb. Another exhibitor must have thought showing sheep was dangerous. He wore a hard hat and orange vest while guiding his lamb around the show ring.

Another contestant was disqualified for showing a goat instead of a lamb. And Judy Zurin got things a bit confused when she gripped a show stick to chase her lamb, as if it were a hog.

A bit oblivious to all the commotion was 2-year-old Sierre Zimmerman who concentrated on making sure her lamb was set up in the proper stance. Her antics so impressed Wendall Landis, judge, that Sierre won the competition.

The event provided some comic relief during an evening of intense competition — which was the intent — according to Carlos Peters, who planned the event.

Happening at the opposite end of the fairgrounds were races and obstacle courses for kids of all ages. In the barnyard obstacle course, participants needed to jump a fence, dig a potato, place an egg in a basket, and run to the finish line.

Other events include a sack race, water balloon toss, chicken chase, and a pig race.

Manheim wraps up the final event during Lancaster County's fair season.

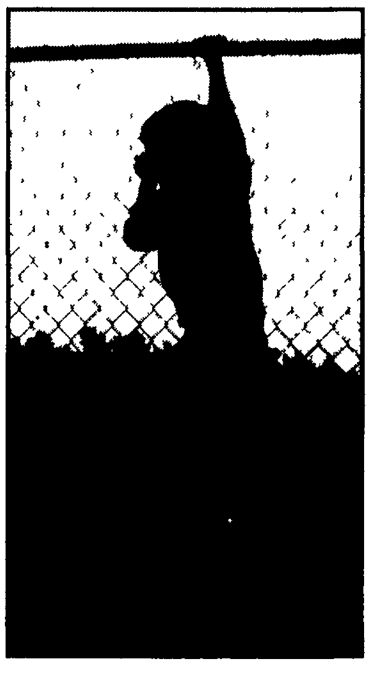
Smile for the camera. This duo wearing matching sunbonnets in the nonserious showmanship division are typical of the original costumes showman wore.

Handing out Red Gate Farm ice cream made with goat's milk are Joel Geib, 12; Stephen Geib, 11; and Dianne Kensinger.

Showing sheep requires a hard hat and orange vest according to this showman dressed for the event.

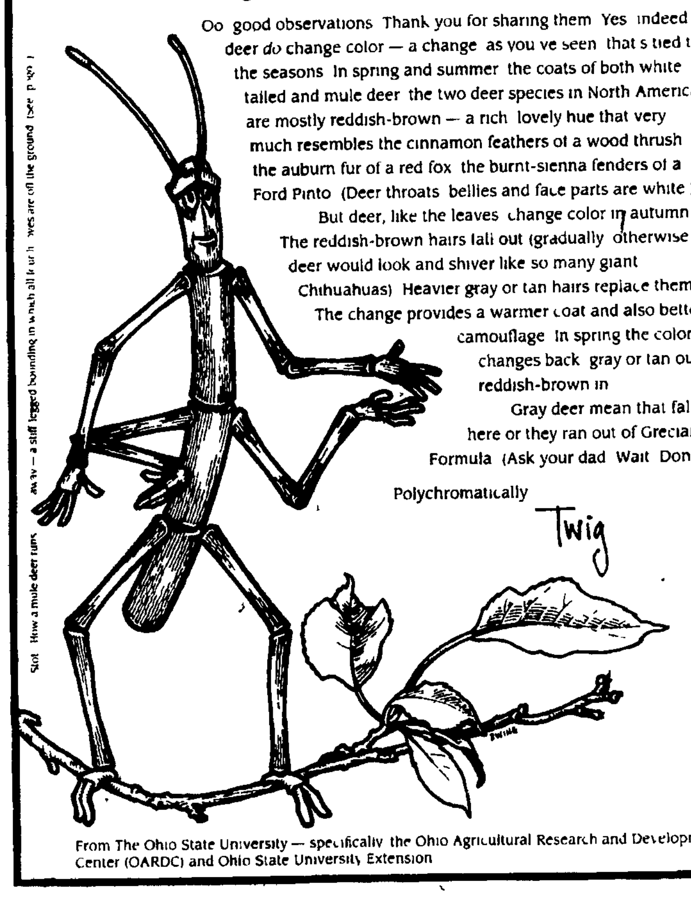
In the 5-7-year-old division, these champions in the Barnyard Obstacle Race, from left, are Corin Costelle, Caleb Dehart, and Kacie Eberly.



What's a kid to do while waiting his turn to race? Climb the fence, of course.

Smart Stuff with Twig Walkingstick

Dear Twig: I saw a deer last winter and it was tan. I saw a deer last summer and it was reddish-brown. I saw a deer this morning, a beautiful fall morning, and it was gray. Do deer change color?



Oo good observations Thank you for sharing them Yes indeed deer do change color — a change as you ve seen that s tied to the seasons In spring and summer the coats of both white tailed and mule deer the two deer species in North America are mostly reddish-brown — a rich lovely hue that very much resembles the cinnamon feathers of a wood thrush the auburn fur of a red fox the burnt-sienna fenders of a 76 Ford Pinto (Deer throats bellies and face parts are white)

But deer, like the leaves change color in autumn The reddish-brown hairs fall out (gradually otherwise deer would look and shiver like so many giant Chihuahuas) Heavier gray or tan hairs replace them The change provides a warmer coat and also better camouflage In spring the color changes back gray or tan out reddish-brown in

Gray deer mean that fall is here or they ran out of Grecian Formula (Ask your dad Wait Don t)

Ida's Notebook

by

Ida Risser

It is time to hunt warmer clothes as it is rather cold in the morning. I'm glad that I got my flower plants put in pots before the frost. This year I only have some 70 on windowsills all over the house. My two bay windows hold the biggest pots. I even transplant some blooming impatiens.

Last week I brought our granddaughter home from a soccer game so that her father could work longer in the fields. He has filled a silo with a soybean and alfalfa mixture. Now a custom operator is trying to put the corn in a bigger silo. He can cut six rows at a time, but has trouble getting the corn that the wind blew down.

Last week I heard from two distant cousins. The one person I had not seen for several years. In fact, I knew her father better than I knew her even though she lives in the county. Her sister's dying brought her to our house. Just now it seems as though there is a lot of sickness in our family. A sister and a nephew were both in the hospital in serious condition.

Last week I picked up a few black walnuts as my husband wants to hull them. They are a special kind called "Stablers." People pick up nuts from our trees along the road. Many of the nuts are wasted as they are in wooded areas.

This year I don't have sweet potatoes but I do have a lot of squash. Some butternut ones are small while others are quite large. The acorn squash are small this year. Often I use the neck of the squash for slicing and then fry it in a pan. Other times I mash it after cooking it and use it for pies the same as a pumpkin.

There is always something to keep me busy and that is the way that I like it as I cannot just sit and read.

Kauffman, Zimmerman Win Breeding Honors, Donoughs Market At Manheim

LOU ANN GOOD
Food And Family Features Editor

MANHEIM (Lancaster Co.) — Manheim Community Farm Show wrapped up Lancaster County's fair season last week.

In sheep competition, Stephanie Kauffman, Jimmy Zimmerman, and the Donough siblings garnered supreme championships honors as in several previous fairs.

Kauffman, Landisville, showed a Southdown ewe that won supreme ewe over six breeds in competition.

Wendall Landis, who judged the event, said the supreme champion sheep should have the least amount of flaws and be able to go to the next couple of levels in competition.

The Southdown ewe impressed Landis for its flawless appearance. One of Kauffman's rams also took the reserve champion ram title.

Stephanie said the lamb had been purchased at an Ohio sale. She said the ewe is afraid of people, and made it difficult to show.

Showing the reserve supreme champion ewe was Derek Spayd with a Shropshire yearling.

Taking the supreme ram title over all breeds was another Southdown. This was shown by Jimmy Zimmerman, who has garnered many champion and reserve titles with his Southdown ram named Stroll.

The Kauffman and Zimmerman Southdowns won over the following breed champions and respective showmen: Dorset ram — Jen Zimmerman, Dorset ewe — Johanna Rohrer. Hampshire ram — Johanna Rohrer. Natural colored ram and ewe — Ryan Donough. Oxford ewe and ram — Joelynn Donough. Polypay ram and ewe — Heather Stallman. Shropshire ram and ewe — Derek Spayd. Suffolk ram and ewe — Andrew Gerhart.

Market lamb competition resulted in Ryan and Joellyn Donough clinching champion and reserve titles, respectively. The siblings have been sharing the spotlight in five previous events in recent Lancaster County sheep competitions.

The judge said the two lambs had the same degree of conditioning, but he preferred the ewe over the wether.

Surprises never cease, according to Joellyn. She said she had not expected to show the lamb that won the reserve placing until two weeks ago.

"We considered her a freezer lamb," Joelynn said. "She didn't develop (show characteristics) until later."

In the non-sale category, Ryan Donough showed the champion, and Adam Zurin, the reserve.

Here is a partial listing of show results:

Cleaning Up Outdoor Furniture

NAZARETH (Northampton Co.) — To bring outdoor furniture back to life, the Soap and Detergent Association suggests the following. Clean aluminum furniture with a mild, non-abrasive cleaner. Molded resin furniture, including resin-weave wicker, should be cleaned with mild detergent and water. Don't use abrasive powders, chlorine bleaches and silicone cleaners on resin surfaces.

If wood furniture is exposed to moisture and dirt, spotting or mildew may occur. If this happens, sand with a fine-grade sandpaper, clean with a wood cleaner, then re-oil the surface. Teak wood is extremely dense and can be periodically scrubbed, using soap, water, and a brush. Always follow the furniture manufacturer's recommended cleaning procedures.

Acrylic, polyester, and cotton fabrics should be spot-cleaned by sponging with a solution of liquid dishwashing detergent and lukewarm water. Rinse with clear water to remove soap; air dry.

RESCHEDULED HARVEST FESTIVAL ANTIQUE TRACTOR PULLS AT SCHUYLKILL CO. FAIRGROUNDS

The Schuylkill County Agricultural Museum will be having Antique Tractor Pulls at the Schuylkill County Fairgrounds on Sat., October 25th at 11 a.m. The Antique Tractor Pulls held in October have been a tradition for many years. The first Tractor Pulls at the Schuylkill County Fair were held this year with the possibility of expanding to include 4 wd pickup trucks, mini modified tractors, and some later model tractors in the future. The Ag. Museum will be open for tours all day. Featured in the museum will be many antique gas engines including a 1906 Bessemer gas engine weighing 14,000 lbs. that was donated to the museum by a local family that owned a feed mill in western PA. It has been totally restored and will be in operation periodically throughout the day. Also on display will be an original Conestoga Wagon along with other antique farm machinery.

Admission to pull and museum is Free.

Anyone interested in competing in the tractor pull may call Kevin Berger at (570) 739-4263 for details.
Tractors must be manufactured prior to 1960.
A fee of $7 per hook will be charged to compete.

Edition, Condition Determine Old Book Value

GAY N. BROWNLEE
Virginia Correspondent

MOUNT CRAWFORD, Va. — To know if a book is important a person must look at its "edition" and also, its "condition," according to Leighton Evans, founder of the Green Valley Book Fair.

The simple truth about gauging the value of a book, however, depends on supply and demand, he says.

How much does it mean to the person who might be searching for a particular title or volume?

"The book is important as long as it is of interest to me," Evans added.

A book published in 1725 and in poor condition, for example, as long as it is acceptable, could still be as valuable as a new book in pristine condition, he said.

The book cover, state of its pages, and status of its dust jacket are important factors that will determine whether the value of a book will go higher or lower.

Buyers who frequent yard sales, book shops, auctions and make internet or word-of-mouth purchases should learn to recognize the signs of book damage.

Insects may be detected when a hole goes through a number of pages. Silverfish are notorious for infesting books. When the environment is suitable they will lay eggs and reproduce.

"When you buy a book check for insect damage," Evans says. "Look for eggs."

He suggests examining down the back behind the spine where the glue is with a flashlight. That's insects' preferred place to lay eggs.

Humidity and dampness will also wreak havoc on books.

"If you have a dehumidifier, use it," Evans says, "and mouseproof your room."

Even though others might consider him an expert on books, Evans declares he knows only about a tenth of what there is to know.

Books have always been his passion. Before he was old enough to read himself, Evans recalls tracing his small finger under the lines of newsprint while his daddy, Ray Evans, read news stories of the day aloud.

"I remember sitting on my father's lap and him reading the newspaper to me," said Evans.

"When I was in fourth grade, Miss Good really pushed the reading program," he added. The teacher's encouragement compelled him to read a greater number of books than any of his classmates and his determination usually earned a reward.

Every Saturday when his dad was in town selling the egg commodities produced on the farm, the youth would be dropped off at the Harrisonburg Public Library where as many books as he could carry would be checked out. The next weekend he returned them and borrowed others.

In 1970, Evans launched the Green Valley Book Fair in the upper level of the farmstead's old barn. Every Saturday morning it featured used books at bargain prices.

It followed the Green Valley Auction held at the same location on Friday nights. The auction was started first, in 1967.

The catalyst for getting an auction going in the community hit Evans while he was working in the Waynesboro, Va., Dupont plant. He had consigned a few personal possessions to be sold by a fellow Dupont employee who auctioneered on the side.

The consignments were successful and Evans thought to himself, "There's a place for this in Harrisonburg."

He took the idea to a local auctioneer and asked him what he thought of it. The fellow fell into step with it and ended up working the Green Valley Auction the next 12 years.

The motto was "Selling is our service."

Whatever they wanted to consign friends and neighbors could bring to the Green Valley Auction. People enjoyed the affair and overflowed onto the barn bridge after arriving via the dirt lane that passed the red brick house where Evans was reared.

In the 1930s fire destroyed the original house but the second one was erected on the same foundation..

Owing to continual growth, by 1978 Evans realized that managing two entities was getting to be pretty overwhelming.

"Gradually they got big enough, and I had to make up my mind which way I was going to go," Evans said.

He chose to keep the book fair. The Green Valley Book Fair today has 25,000 square feet of showroom space in the buildings that were constructed in 1992. When Evans retired from the book fair, several members of his family assumed the management of it.

Recently, to facilitate leisurely browsing for customers, the fairs were increased to six annual events from the former four. Each 15-day fair offers visitors about 500,000 new books in 40 categories.

'I think I've always been a simple person," Evans says. 'I can't imagine the impact of the book fair. I sincerely believe the business is supposed to be there."

Visitors to it are directed to park appropriately, either by signs or by persons on traffic patrol.

"The people who park cars are important," Evans said.

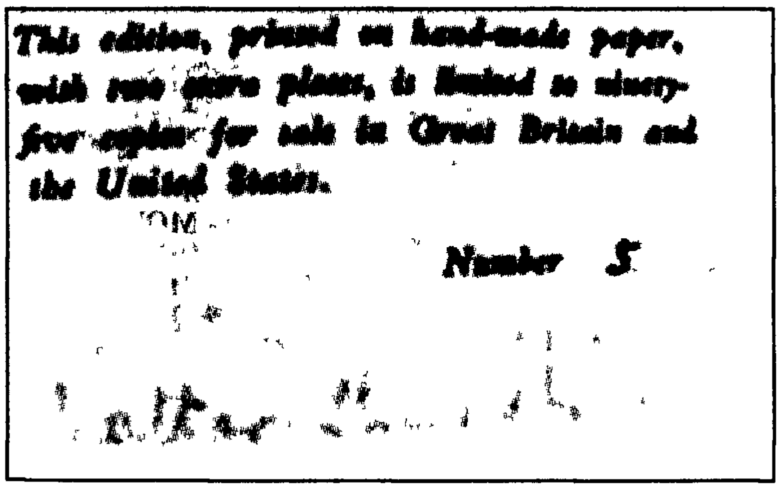
"You are the first people my customers see and the last ones they see," was what he always told the crew. "Take care of them customers."

In November of 1978 the auction was discontinued but not for long. Some months later it was restarted by an interested member of the family.

Green Valley Auction also continued to grow steadily. It has evolved into an entity today that features fine arts and estate items.

Interested parties can view the book fair history and schedule at the website www.gvbookfair.com.

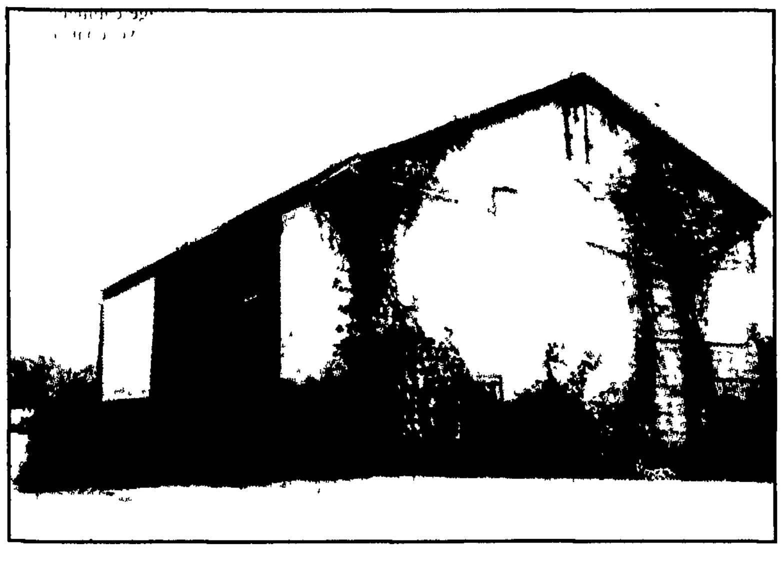
Since the days of his boyhood, Leighton Evans has collected countless numbers of books, yet, he is out shopping for others for the simple reason he loves books. The buildings and parking area of the Green Valley Book Fair appear in the background with the old barn at right.



This edition, printed on hand-made paper, with two extra plates, is limited to ninety-five copies for sale in Great Britain and the United States.

Number 5

Relevant information is found just inside Walter Shaw Sparrows book "British Sporting Artists," published in 1922. Its a First Edition and copy number 5 of 95 printed. It has two extra plates. For an unknown reason there are smalls holes in the pages. According to Leighton Evans they appear to be pencil jab marks rather than insect-caused damage. Also, the author wrote his signature in pencil.



In the old barn Leighton Evans found his niche in life, but not with the agriculture work he was raised with. Instead, he converted the barn's upper level into an auction house. Three years later he added a used and antique books fair. Every weekend one event was held Friday evening and the other Saturday morning.

Leighton Evans is pictured with his daughter Michele Miller and son Michael Evans at the Green Valley Book Fair. Michele and Michael share the management responsibilities of the fair, founded on the Evans farmstead in Mt. Crawford. Green Valley Book Fair is conducted six times annually.

Ad Trade Signs Vary In Quality, Price

There's a bit of truth in the old saying, "beauty is in the eye of the beholder."

Would you pay over $900 for a piece of board with a shop name printed on it? Would you hang it on your wall as a form of folk art? Somebody did at the recent Skinner Auction.

And, it will probably end up in somebody's folk art collection. This two-sided painted wood panel, with only black and white lettering fetched $940 over an estimate of $400/$600. All it said in black letters was "Herbert Gardner Harnessmaker."

I guess the weathered surface and small damage to one corner added to the charm. One of the most common trade signs, a painted wooden barber pole, with red and white spiraling stripes sold over estimate of $600/$800 for $1,958.

However, it's a different matter when the trade sign has an elaborately painted design or is a figure. At the same auction, a late 18th century, New England painted and decorated sign failed to find a buyer at $15,000. On one side was a painted eagle. on the other a leopard, black lettering and dated 1773.

Trade signs were first used in America in the coastal settlements of New England, Philadelphia, and Virginia. By the mid-19th century many talented artists and carvers supplemented their incomes making trade signs. Among them Edward Hicks, famed for his "peaceable kingdom" paintings.

The purpose wasn't merely to attract customers but to help the many who couldn't read, identify what the shopkeeper was offering. Three-dimensional signs, had flat signboards so passerbys from either directions could read the names and addresses.

A shopkeepers status was often reflected in the quality of his sign. The more elaborate the sign, the more prosperous the owner, who could afford the best craftsmen.

Signboards are divided into several categories: trade signs that relate to any type of merchant, service or retail shop; tavern signs; personal house signs with the owner's name and address; toll signs; roadside signs or directional indicators.

Of all the signs, the most popular with collec-

Antique Detective

tors are the tavern signs. Some displayed animals and birds.

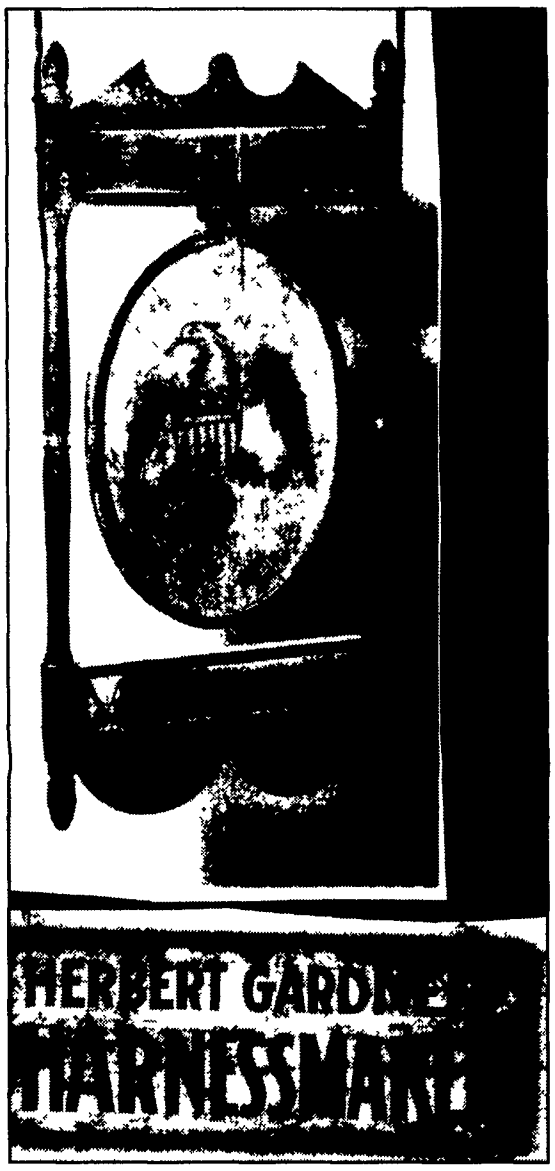
Among the rarest, and most expensive trade signs, are the full form wood carvings.

A famous example is the painted and carved figure of a baseball player, c.1875, by Samuel A. Robb. Robb of New York, was famed as a carver. Highly collectible and expensive are those carved in shapes of the advertised trade, such as hands (glovemakers), shoes, tailor's shears and spectacles as well as eyes (optician).

CLUES: Because of the very nature of the printed trade signs (simplicity), they are easy to duplicate. Most often reproduced are carved, painted, barber's poles.The more elaborate the pole the more expensive it can be. However, the pole with decorations of clippers or scissors may have them as "new" additions.

Artificial crackling is the most common form of faking. Carefully look at any splits in the wood; supposedly proof of old wood. Sniff the piece. New, new wood retains its scent of fresh cutting for quite awhile. Many reproduced tavern signs mention an owner's name and a fanciful painting of a bird or animal. Many also depict early scenes.

While simple, printed sign boards sell for several hundred dollars, keep your eyes open for examples in out-of-the way places. Old lake resort areas are possible sources, where modern motels have replaced the old cottage rentals. Send your discoveries off to auction and keep your fingers crossed for an eager buyer.



At the top is an 18th century, double-sided tavern sign. At the bottom is a painted wood, harness maker's sign, 19th century. Photo credit: Skinner Galleries, Boston, Mass.

Seedway Hosts Annual Kickoff Meeting

HALL, N.Y. — Seedway, Inc. conducted it's 40th annual kickoff meeting, Sept. 5-6, at the Ramada Inn Lakefront, Geneva, N.Y.

Seedway hosted dealers from New England, New York, and Pennsylvania for an awards banquet, sales information meeting, and corn and soybean plot tours.

In keeping with Seedway's 40th anniversary, the theme of the meeting was "Celebrating 40 Years of Seed and Service."

More than 130 dealers, employees, and guests were on hand for the awards banquet, during which 20 Seedway farm seed dealers were recognized for their outstanding sales efforts during the 2002-2003 sales year. Special recognition was given to Fred and Elsie Savory, of Greene, N.Y., who have represented Seedway for all 40 years of the company's existence. On hand to present the Savory's with their award was Carl Fribolin, former owner of the Company, who founded Seedway in 1963.

Special guests were present from Allied Seed, Pickseed West, Gustafson, Nitragin, Lallemand, ABM, Brett-Young Seed, and Seedway's parent company, Growmark, Inc.

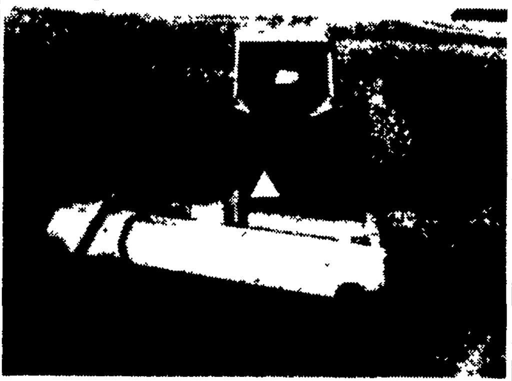
Rake Small Stones & Rocks into a Windrow

Ready For The Picker or Stone Fork



In the Degelman tradition of quality rock removal equipment, here is the RR1500 rock rake, another example of Degelman's continuing commitment to excellence.

The RR1500 rock rake includes a unique auto-fold system which provides safe, easy transport no wider than most tractors (8 feet in transport position) with full use of the 14 foot width in the working position. And with hydraulic angling, it can take full advantage of the 10 to 30 degree angling range.

Degelman Rock Rakes are excellent machines for grooming fairways and conditioning soil for the construction of golf courses. It leaves a beautiful final finish preparing the course for seeding. They are also used for reclaiming gravel on gravel roads. And the heavy duty construction and quality workmanship means that it is built to last.

EVERLAST II EVERLAST II EVERLAST II

Metal Roofs Aren't Created Equal

EVERLAST II IS BETTER:

- it is galvanized heavier, like old times.
- it is heat formed, less paint cracks.
- is cut while hot, prevents early edge rust.
- won't scratch as easy, paint is harder.
- won't bend or buckle as easy, stronger design.
- laps are tighter, and virtually invisible.
- nail/screws seal better, ribs fit tighter to head.
- zinc phosphate, not chromate under paint.
- still priced about the same or less.

EVERLAST II
is excellent for houses and barns.
DOUBLE DIPPED GALVANIZED is proven best for animals.
STANDING SEAM
is ideal for houses.

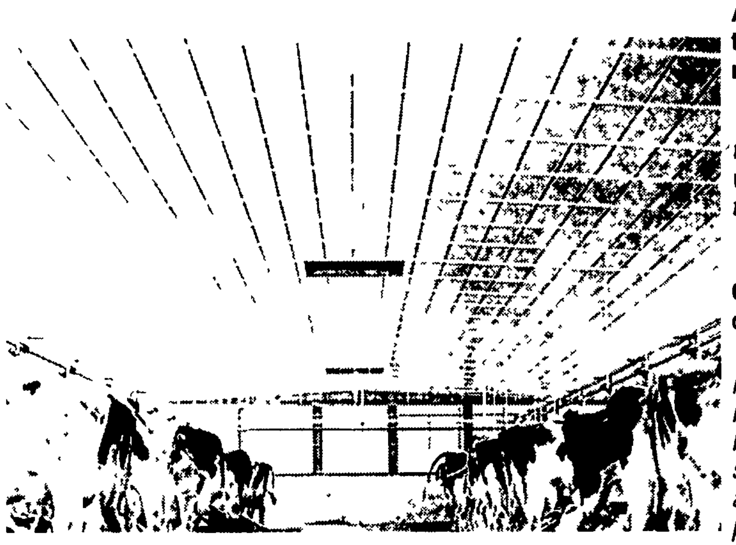
– Ceiling systems designed for your dairy, swine, and poultry facilities, as well – as shops, warehouses, garages, arenas, and more.

Tired of working in a cold, noisy shop?

These ceiling systems are designed to hold any amount of insulation, and with insulation above, produce sound reduction qualities much greater than steel

Is the banding in your hog or poultry barn deteriorating?

Let us replace them with our heavier polyester bands which do not stretch or become brittle over time



Are you frustrated with the birds in your implement shed?

Get the problem under control with a triply ceiling, as well as greatly improving the lighting.

Contemplating a drop ceiling?

Demand a triply ceiling above your drop ceiling if there is insulation being installed. This will serve as a vapor barrier along with permanently preventing falling insulation.

Providing the Ag industry with a very durable, attractive, waterproof, noncorrosive, alternative to conventional ceilings at a fraction of the cost.

Galvanized or Galvalume?

For metal roofing and siding, which is better, painted Galvanized or painted Galvalume?. Galvanizing is many times better if it's mill certified G100. Why is it better? Galvanizing tends to "heal" when scratched. The more galvanizing, the better. Everlast is ten times better at "healing" than galvalume because galvalume hardly "heals" at all when scratched. Also cut edges rust quickly on galvalume.

You Must Hear what Brad says:

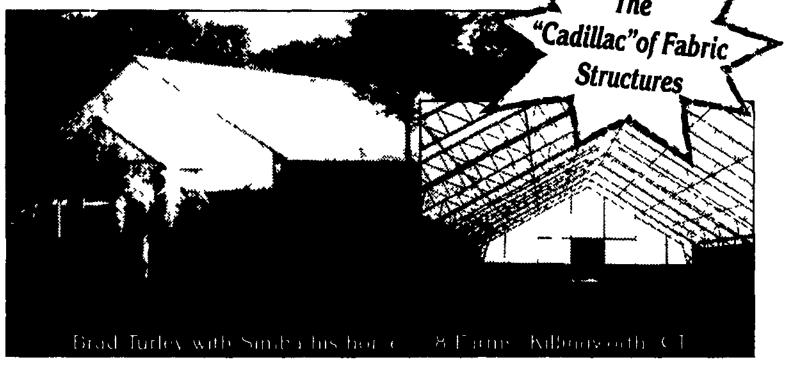
The "Cadillac" of Fabric Structures

"I couldn't be more pleased with my riding arena!"



"I knew what I wanted and I found it! After extensive research I knew I needed a fabric structure from We Cover. The facts that made my decision were:

"The Engineering – when I saw their heavy built trusses and engineered drawings, I knew their building would hold up to the Atlantic Coastal winds and snow.

"The Lighting – I can ride my horse in the natural light with no shadows to spook my horse.

"The Design – The Building has straight side walls giving me plenty of clearance for riding. The fabric is in 12' panels and each panel is tightened by a ratchet system. Add to the this the convenient overhang and a sensible ventilation system. These excellent features combined with the many options of this building package make it a real winner!

*"My local building engineer is so impressed, he says he will never again recommend a traditional building for an indoor riding arena. "I recommend you call We Cover today!"

The strength, integrity, and appearance of a solid building along with the lighting and construction advantages of a fabric structure.

BEEF TIPS
When the breed was imported from Europe, Simmental were mostly horned and were red and white or yellow and white in color Today, the polled gene has been thoroughly incorporated through upgrading from naturally polled breeds, and the color of Simmental in the US ranges from pure black to pure red, to spotted and combinations in between. Color was also changed primarily through upgrading

Orders Booked Now Will Deliver by March 1

- Dakota alfalfas are dormancy rated at "2' and proven to excel in winter hardiness and production!
- Trask Seed is American grown and priced to reflect no corporate monopolies!

PA farmers have great hay crops with South Dakota alfalfa seed. Painterland Farms, Westfield, PA, John Painter said "The Trask's seed grew extremely well. We recommend it to anyone. It is real leafy and yielded as well as any of the high priced name brand seeds. It cost 40% as much. We planted 294 acres. We intend to plant more this spring. It was exceptionally winter hardy and resisted frost damage. We are very pleased."

E. Stoltzfus from Lancaster County has planted a more expensive name brand seed next to Trask Seed and sees no difference.

Join the numerous farmers in the PA/NY area harvesting superb alfalfa from South Dakota seed

Lancaster Farming Celebrates 10 Years Of Corn Talk

'Founders' Marvel At The Changes In Decade Since

ROCKSPRING (Centre Co.) — One corn industry specialist noted the many mergers and bankruptcies over the years. Another points to the working interrelationships with science and industry.

Still another believes in the changes that have taken place in selection of corn for certain specific traits, whether they are improved feed performance or resistance to pests.

Yet all three corn experts believe that in the 10 years since Lancaster Farming first published Corn Talk (Feb. 13, 1993), a newsletter of the Pennsylvania Corn Growers Association (PCGA), the industry has seen some major changes.

Corn industry experts gathered at the annual Penn State Ag Progress Days in August this year to talk about the industry in the past 10 years.

LANCASTER (Lancaster Co.) — Penn-Mar Ethanol, LLC, a company founded this year from a group of entrepreneurs and corn producers from the area, is getting closer to building an $80 million ethanol facility on a 65-acre site in Conoy Township, Lancaster County, along the Susquehanna River and adjacent to a major railaway. According to planners, the plant will have the capacity to produce 50 million gallons of the renewable fuel each year from corn. Co-products will include distillers grain and carbon dioxide.

What Happens At The Mill?

MICHELLE KUNJAPPU
Sections Staff

LEBANON (Lebanon Co.) — Although grain is an everyday part of agriculture, few stop to think about the process that helps to make feed ready for the feedbunk.

At Mark Hershey Farms, Inc., a mill that has been in operation since 1956, that process is part of day-to-day business. The mill offers custom feeds and pellets, steam flaked and/or ground grains, and grain drying and storage.

According to website information at www.markhersheyfarms.com, Mark C. Hershey — the founder of the mill — was a pioneer in perfecting the process of steam cooking whole soybeans that could then be flaked/rolled (called "soyflakes"), and ground.

The steam cooked and flaked soybean is sought after by customers since the soyflake retains nutrients (35 percent protein) efficiently. Additionally, valuable fat is not burned off in the steam cooking and rolling process.

Flaked grain is also in demand since they will mix with pellets, and stay mixed, so the entire ration is more appetizing to livestock, according to David Bates, controller. The mill also steam cooks and flakes or rolls corn, barley, and oats.

Customers can purchase steam flaked/rolled soybeans, corn, barley, and oats in bulk or bags.

Donald Smith, mill cooker, steam flakes the grain that comes from local farmers, "as the supply holds up," said Smith. "We buy all the local that we can, depending on the year."

Steam rolling, according to Smith, allows the animal to receive more total digestible nutrients (TDN).

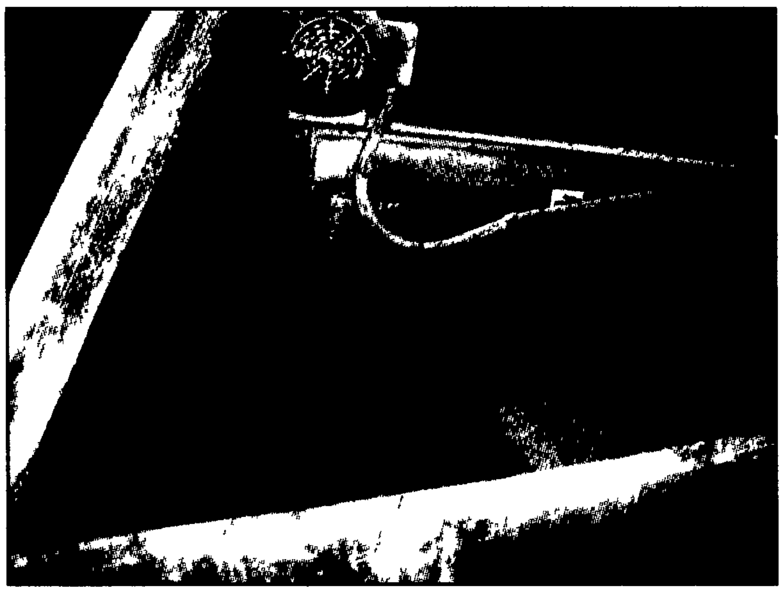
"The corn is softer and easier to digest. It must be steamed to soften it or it won't roll — it would bounce otherwise," said Bates.

The corn is stored in bins or dumped in by trucks, when it is cleaned by being shaken through a large screen. Every truckload is sampled for moisture content.

Smith prefers the corn to be at 14-14.5 percent moisture, "because if it's too dry, it breaks up more," he said. "The best corn for rolling is crib dry."

At the mill, "we only fill the bins later in the year, such as November, when the moisture gets down to about 20 percent," he said. However, "new varieties tend to get dry faster, so we can put the corn in the bins sooner."

Donald Smith weighs out 250 grams of corn to measure the moisture content.



Newly-flaked corn, still hot, comes out of the auger.

Corn is unloaded into this large screen to remove any debris.

The moisture content remains consistent throughout the steaming and flaking process — "it comes out with nearly the same reading," said Smith.

After being unloaded and moisture-tested, the corn then comes down a pipe, goes into an elevator, and is moved into the steam cooker. An auger moves it through the steaming process — where it moves through 212 degrees of pure steam — for 10-12 minutes.

Next, the corn goes through two 18-inch rollers, applying 1,500 pounds of pressure to flake the kernels.

"Every kernel should be broken," said Smith. "That makes the nutrients more available."

The 60- and 30- horsepower boilers generate the steam.

"From the time I start the machine" until the time the steam-flaked corn comes out and begins cooling, 25 minutes have elapsed.

According to the Mark Hershey Farms Website, producers are finding that finer-ground corn offers easier digestion for livestock, so the grinding process is also important at the mill.

Equipment on the property also has the ability to coarse grind corn, which is used in poultry feeds.

Mike Meyer, mill supervisor, explained the corn grinding process.

When the corn first comes off the truck, it is moisture tested.

Approximately 15 percent of the corn that the mill grinds is mixed into feed, with 85-100 percent fine ground for bulk sales, said Meyer. For the flaked corn, the breakdown is 50/50 — put into feeds and sold in bulk.

According to Meyer, the corn is gravity fed into the hammer mill, then ground through a 3/32-inch or a 5/32-inch screen.

The screen sizes are different for soybeans and soyflakes, explained Meyer.

The size of the screens depends on how fine the customer wants the product. Generally for livestock, customers prefer a fine-ground corn so the nutrients are more readily utilized. The coarse-ground corn is used in poultry feeds.

After the corn goes through the hammer mill, an auger takes it out and dumps it into an elevator that distributes it into bins.

"I prefer if the corn is 14 (percent moisture) or under to grind," said Meyer. "Fifteen is borderline. It will mold." Higher moisture gives the corn a shorter shelf life, as far as the length of time in the bin.

More than half of the customers use ground corn, according to Meyer.

Mike Meyer, mill supervisor, oversees the corn grinding process.

Smith displays rolled corn.

Ethanol: Penn-Mar Project Manager Provides Answers

Management Authority's waste incinerator, adjacent to the ethanol site, will provide a portion of the power to turn corn into ethanol and co-products, according to planners.

Scott Welsh, project manager, said Penn-Mar Ethanol is in the process of applying for an air permit with the Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Protection, rezoning, and working on a land development plan. He expects the approval process to be completed by February or March of next year.

Early this month, Lancaster Farming (LF) conducted the following question-and-answer session with Welsh:

LF: What benefits could local corn growers see from this plant other than price?

Welsh: We're expecting the facilities will be farmer-friendly, with fast unloading. That's the main thing.

LF: What effect could the plant have on local corn prices?

Welsh: There are lots of effects it could have. Most of the time, it won't have a significant impact. The most likely effect is that at harvest time, when basis is low, the plant will help to keep the basis up a bit. Because corn is our major input cost, we don't want to intentionally drive the price of corn up.

LF: What is the expected marketability of the co-products?

Welsh: We're expecting to produce a high-quality, golden dried distillers grain. We think it's going to have real good marketability to dairy producers. There's more and more nutrition work out of the Midwest that shows high-quality distillers grain has good value for hogs and poultry as well.

We will potentially market wet distillers grain at 50-60 percent moisture. One advantage of that is we won't have the expense of drying. Some studies also show that palatability and digestibility is higher. The disadvantage is that wet distillers grain has a shorter shelf life than the dried product.

We will be capturing carbon dioxide and probably will have an "off-take" agreement with an industrial gas company that will use it either as compressed liquid carbon dioxide or dry ice.

LF: Will producing distillers grain from this imported corn add to the nutrient management problem in the region?

Welsh: I would say no, because we're already importing a percentage of the feed products in the region. The distillers grain we produce will largely replace other distillers grain and dry grains being imported into the region.

LF: Is the ethanol market in the East purely dependent on government regulations?

Welsh: No, it's not. The banning of MTBE and passing of a renewable fuel standard at the federal level are part of the regulation aspect. They certainly are factors that are going to affect the ethanol market. But we think that even without them, the economics justify the use of ethanol.

LF: Is the ethanol market projected to grow in the Northeast?

Welsh: Yes. Useage projections are anywhere between a half billion and one billion gallons per year in the Northeast. Based on that, the 50 million gallons a year our plant is expected to produce would supply between 5 and 10 percent of the ethanol used in the Northeast.

LF: Some people indicate that ethanol is a valuable liquid energy source produced from lower value energy sources. Will this be true in this facility?

Welsh: In our case, we'll be getting two-thirds of our energy needs from steam from the incinerator. Our electrical needs will also be met by that.

LF: Is there enough demand for ethanol to support several plants in the region?

Welsh: Yes, I think there is. I think that goes back to the estimate that we'll produce between 5 and 10 percent of ethanol demand in the Northeast.

LF: Why produce ethanol in a corn-deficit area?

Welsh: Our feeling after doing the analysis is that the economics are roughly equivalent to what they would be in a corn surplus area because we are closer to markets. We have higher freight costs for corn, but [illegible] freight costs for the final products. It's like a feed or flour mill or other kinds of food production facilities that are doing processing at the market end. We still think the majority of ethanol will be produced in the Midwest, but we think there is room for a percentage of production to come from the Northeast. An essential part of it is good rail access.

LF: Is there a possibility of using different inputs or producing different outputs in the future with this kind of facility?

Welsh: I would say there is. To a limited extent, we've looked at using hull-less barley. It's not really available yet, but it would seem to make sense.

On the output side, we've also looked at producing alcohol for industrial uses, such as in the pharmaceutical industry.

LF: Will local producers be able to invest in the plant in the future?

Welsh: It's possible. We don't have all the details of how the finances will be out together yet. Investment opportunities are limited by the laws and regulations governing limited liability corporations (LLCs).

10 Years Of Corn Talk

Since 1993, "a lot of companies have been bought out or gone out of business, or are working for someone else," said Willard Jones, director of sales and marketing, Doebler's, Inc., as he paged through that first issue of Corn Talk at Ag Progress.

The association, formerly the Pennsylvania Master Corn Growers Association (PMCGA) changed its name to simply the PCGA a couple of years ago simply because many members thought the name sounded too elite, and kept the small-scale or experimental farms out of the picture.

The name "Corn Talk" came about from a man named Walter Johnson, Julian, Centre County, when the association formed in the early 1980s. The publication was first a member newsletter. A section was first printed in a different ag newspaper than Lancaster Farming.

According to Greg Roth, Penn state corn specialist, Johnson simply "came up with the name," he said. "It was simple and clean and to the point."

What began as a small member newsletter evolved into a major agricultural newspaper insert.

Roth replaced Joe McGahen as executive secretary of PMCGA/PCGA in 1990. Three years later, Corn Talk came to Lancaster Farming, which reaches more than 50,000 producers and agri-industry representatives by direct mail — the largest circulation in its 48-year history and one of the largest ag newspapers in the world.

The section allows "university, industry, and farmers to form a closer relationship, something that is unique to this area," Roth said.

Jones noted the "even playing field" for all concerned, and a good forum, away from overbearing commercial influence, for news about the corn industry to reach a wide segment of the farm population in the Mid-Atlantic and Northeast.

Grant Troop, a producer from Oxford and president of PMCGA/PCGA when Corn Talk began in Lancaster Farming in 1993 (who was also featured on the cover of the first issue), noted that the timing of the articles in Corn Talk has always been critical.

Troop noted that in the early 1990s, corn manufacturers started producing a higher yield grain. And other "quality component" factors, Troop noted, such as high lycene or waxy corn, started to become prominent in planning, marketing, and finally growing the product.

The factors that improve di-

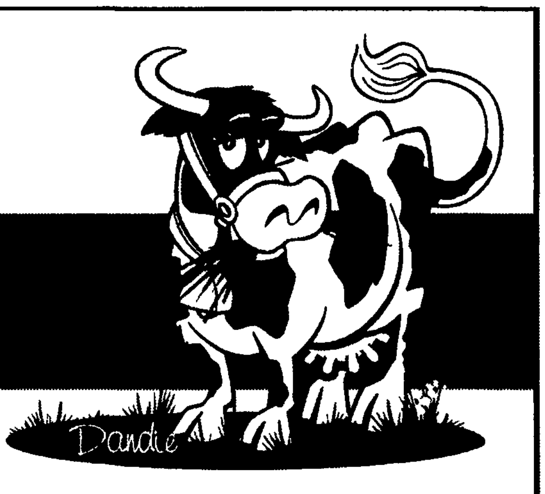
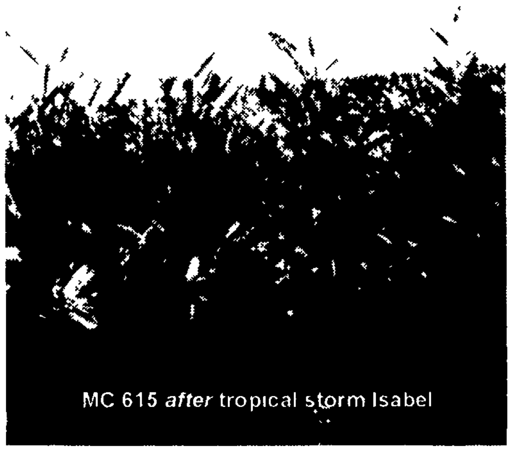
Higher Digestibility & Standability
MC 615 Corn Silage



Stands Above the Rest for Standability & Digestibility!

Master's Choice 615
A 115 day hybrid- Makes a sweet smelling, nutrient dense silage with high grain content, and excellent digestibility Plant health is also excellent Reports of 2002 and 2003 performance have been excellent. Comments made by farmers include: excellent yields, very few broken stalks, even after tropical storm Isabel went through, very high levels of sugar (typically 4 to 6%), and great packing characteristics.

Note In extreme wind, leaves were shredded, and stalks blown over, but very few stalks were broken MC 615 has a dense, but shorter stalk - usually shorter than most silage hybrids



MC 615 after tropical storm Isabel

The secret to Master's Choice standability and great digestibility is less lignin, but much more digestible cellulose fiber. MC 615 and its short season half sister MC 520Q have thick, dense stalks that are not only nutritious, but also yield outstanding for a corn of average height.

some of the issues we've discussed in the pages of Corn Talk here during the last 10 years.

In some ways it seems as if corn production hasn't changed that much, but if you take a minute to think about it, there have been an incredible number of changes in the technology that we use.

Perhaps some of the most striking changes have come in the area of biotechnology. In the mid-'90s, Bt corn was introduced and soon several different events were available. The great debate on Bt corn developed with the Monarch butterfly issue and then came the Starlink issue, which affected many producers.

We all became familiar with the issues surrounding the use of biotechnology, perhaps more than any other part of agriculture. Then in the late '90s, Roundup Ready corn arrived on the scene. At the time the standard thinking was that it would never take off and the benefit of Roundup resistance was not nearly as beneficial in corn as in soybeans. Now Roundup Ready corn is a sizeable and growing part of the corn hybrid market.

More recently, we have seen the introduction of the rootworm Bt corn and, as with all the other technologies, we have been conducting intensive research programs on the use of these products and will be reporting on them in future issues of Corn Talk.

In the equipment area, there also have been many, many changes. Think about the introduction of yield monitors and the development of yield mapping — a precision ag technology. I remember how we did lots of calibration studies with our new yield monitor and how exciting it was to develop that first yield map of one of our fields at the research farm. I also remember all the hardware and software problems we encountered in the early days and how close we came to throwing $20,000 worth of equipment in the pond. Now, it seems so effortless to collect yield data, and many farmers have them on board and use them routinely.

Another equipment innovation that has really taken off has been the row-neutral or Kemper head for silage choppers. I remember driving four hours to western New York to get video of a farmer with a Kemper head in 1993 — now these heads are commonplace. Other equipment innovations that have occurred in corn production include the many planter medications — the zone tillage systems, the row cleaners, the seed firmers, and now the spaded closing wheels. Now we have many planter test stands for fine-tuning planter performance. All of planter technologies were rare back in the early '90s.

Herbicides have undergone changes as well during this period. There have been lots of new, low-rate products that added to things like Beacon and Accent that were available in the early '90s. We also got safeners added to some of our traditional products. And we've seen a move away from Paraquat to Roundup for many burndown applications.

We've also seen many changes in how fertilizer management has developed in corn production in our state. We've seen the development of nutrient management plans based on N and now the P index is being introduced. We see farmers moving away from the use of starter fertilizers in some situations and some producers putting all their N in bands 4 inches from the row. These are all relatively new developments in the last 10 years or so.

Another change that has happened has been continuing industry consolidations. Common names like Muncy Chief, Hoffmans Seeds, Cargill Seeds, Jacques Seeds, and others have faded into history. Similar trends have occurred in the chemical industry and in the equipment industry.

We've also seen changes in our silage evaluation. We saw the introduction of the BMR hybrids, the leafy hybrids, and the silage only hybrids. We saw the development of in-vitro and insitu tests for evaluating feed quality. Now we hear about differences in the kernel texture among hybrids and its importance to the dairy farmer.

All of these innovations during the last 10 years have required a significant amount of knowledge to understand and to use effectively. Its gratifying to know that extension and industry representatives have accomplished this education through meetings and publications such as Corn Talk and others.

I'm proud to have played a role in studying these technologies over the years and sharing our findings with you in the pages of Corn Talk. I think together we've made some real differences in how we grown corn and I look forward to working on issues like these for another 10 years or more in the future.

Gettysburg Area Young Farmers Gather For Crops Meeting

DAVE LEFEVER
Lancaster Farming Staff

HANOVER (Adams Co.) — Weeds and how to control them were main topics at the Gettysburg Area Young Farmers' twilight agronomy meeting Aug. 26.

Dan Winters, farmer and ag consultant, hosted the event on his farm near Hanover. For many years, Winters has conducted field trials for new corn and soybean varieties on his land.

This year, "the biggest challenge was getting it planted," Winters said, referring to the wet conditions this spring.

Farmers attending the meeting had a chance to view test plots, identify weeds, hear news from a number of seed and chemical companies, and earn spray applicator credits.

It was a challenging year for weed control, according to chemical company representatives at the meeting.

Dan Winters shows the group an asiatic dayflower plant. Asiatic dayflower is an invasive weed becoming more of a problem in the area.

John Flanagan of Syngenta said that wet years like this one showed that herbicides don't always work as well as farmers expect.

"Chemicals are just tools," Flanagan said. "They all have limitations."

Some weeds were tougher to control this year, especially weeds that grew too big for herbicides to do their job.

Flanagan gave velvetleaf as an example. Glyphosate is labeled for controlling velvetleaf to a maximum height of 12 inches. When the weeds are taller than that, farmers can't expect to get good control.

Weather and soil conditions also play a big role in the effectiveness of the chemicals, Flanagan pointed out.

"If conditions were perfect, probably every herbicide out there would work at half (the labeled) rate," Flanagan said.

Don Coulson of Miller Chemical talked about the need to check water hardness and alkalinity on a regular basis to make sure herbicides and surfactants work properly.

"(Water quality) can make a big difference whether you have control or don't have control," Coulson said.

Coulson recommended that farmers use drift control agents in sprays, especially around populated areas.

Seed and chemical representatives on hand included those from American Seed, Dekalb/Monsanto, Doebler, Garst, Hubner, Mid-Atlantic Independent Tech Services, Mid-Atlantic Seed, Miller Chemical, Seedway, and Syngenta.

Dan Winters has also been experimenting with foliar (leaf) feeding of corn and soybeans to increase yields.

Winters has compiled two articles on the subject, discussing the possibilities of 100 bushel/acre soybeans, and increasing corn yields by 25 bushels/acre.

"We're learning every day," Winters said.

For more information, check his Website at wintersag.com.

Donna Tuckey compares corn roots from hybrids with and without the Bacillus thuringiensus (Bt) gene for controlling rootworm.

Rob Kauffman talks to farmers about his independent corn hybrid field testing service.

10 Years Of Corn Talk

gestibility or those items critical to certain growers became a "lot more finely tuned," Troop noted, in those 10 years of research and development.

Those traits are now "very targeted" in corn varieties. Traits have also improved for overall crop protection, such as a Bt corn for European corn borer and now for corn rootworm; herbicide-tolerant hybrids, such as Roundup Ready corn; and other specialized crop protection.

Troop served as president of the association from 1992-1994.

Despite many changes, some things haven't changed in 10 years — such as the format for the Five-Acre corn results, published in the March issues of Corn Talk. And Corn Talk is published three times a year, with little change to the schedule in the past decade.

Roth calls the columns and inputs that appear regularly — in addition to strong feature reporting on the success of growers throughout the state — the strongest factors in the "collaborative effort" of the section/newsletter.

How Wet Was It?

Greg Roth
Professor Of Agronomy
Penn State

It sure seemed like a wet year to grow corn. How did we fare compared to the record books?

Here in State College, September was officially the second wettest on record and that followed August, which was the wettest August since they began keeping records 108 years ago.

Rainfall totals here were 5.32 inches in June, 5.41 inches in July, 9.1 inches in August, and 7.21 inches in September.

This was the first time we have had four consecutive months with 5 inches of rain since records were being kept. By the end of September, we have received 42.83 inches of rain compared to our normal total of 38.5 inches in an entire year.

The bottom line — we just had another very unusual year, on the heels of a very unusual year in 2002. Let's hope for something more "normal" in 2004.

Stalk Rot: Naturally Controlled In Sorghum; Same For Corn?

ANDY ANDREWS
Editor

LANDISVILLE (Lancaster Co.) — Research into a natural resistance to stalk rot on sorghum plants is slowly yielding its promise to plant scientists.

Penn State researchers are looking for ways to convert that same type of naturally occurring resistance to stalk rot from sorghum to corn plants.

The potential harvest of information could mean savings of thousands of dollars in spraying fungicides on crops or the use of preplant strategies to control fungus.

The idea of coming up with ways to metabolically engineer phytoalexins in corn is the work of Surinder I. Chopra, assistant professor of maize genetics, Department of Crop and Soil Sciences and Faculty of Life Sciences Consortium at Penn State.

Together with colleague Michael Robbins, doctoral student in ecological and molecular plant physiology, Chopra is looking at ways of using natural plant chemicals to impart plant disease resistance.

Chopra and Robbins spoke about the research during the first Penn State-sponsored Agronomy-Industry Field Day at the Southeast Research and Extension Center last July.

Robbins noted the research is in the very early stage. But the fungus (anthracnose) that attacks stalks in corn is put at bay by naturally occurring chemicals in sorghum.

The department is using a "transgenic approach," noted Chopra, to find the genes in corn and to adapt those methods either through traditional breeding or biotechnology.

The sorghum's genes produce a red pigment. The pigment is toxic to the fungus. The question: how to find that same protein in corn?

In the coming years, the team will be looking at several strategies that could provide a big impact on how fungus is controlled in field corn.

Michael Robbins, far right, is a doctoral student in ecological and molecular plant physiology at Penn State. He spoke about research into developing natural resistance in corn to stalk rot in July. Photo by Andy Andrews, editor

Corn Production Forecast Up 12 Percent, Largest On Record

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Corn production is forecast at 10.1 billion bushels, up 12 percent from last year and 6 percent above 2001, according to the National Agricultural Statistics Service.

Based on conditions as of Aug. 1, corn yields are expected to average 139.9 bushels per acre, up 9.9 bushels from last year. If realized, both production and yield would be the largest on record. The previous record for both was set in 1994 when production was estimated at slightly below the 10.1 billion bushels being forecast for 2003 and yield was 138.6 bushels per acre.

Corn yields are higher in all States east of the Mississippi River as favorable precipitation and temperatures have been received since planting occurred. With the exception of Iowa and Minnesota, forecasted yields in all the Corn Belt States are increasing from last year. However, both States are forecasting lower yields from record 2002 estimates. Farmers expect to harvest 71.9 million acres of corn for grain, down 70,000 acres from June but up 4 percent from 2002.

Frost-Damaged Corn

Greg Roth
Professor Of Agronomy
Penn State

Many areas of the state experienced a killing frost on the night of Oct. 2. This ended a roller-coaster season to grow corn here in Centre County.

Later-planted corn in many areas had not completely matured. At our Rockspring Research Farm, a 109-day hybrid planted on April 28 had reached black layer but the same hybrid planted on May 15 was only at the half milk line stage of maturity.

The same hybrid planted on June 1 was only at one quarter milk line. This late maturity was due to several factors: a cool growing season, a full season hybrid, and delayed planting.

What will happen to this corn and how should we manage it? Generally, frost will cause a rapid drydown of silage corn and will need to be harvested quickly to avoid silage that is too dry. Sugars will also be expressed from the leaves and can be lost from the plant with subsequent rainfall events, lowering the quality of the silage.

If corn is very immature, and not even dented, then it may still be too wet for silage and harvest will need to be delayed.

This is another situation where moisture testing is critical. Immature corn often has a bit more frost resistance and may not be completely killed by the first frost. This can complicate the situation and make moisture estimation more difficult.

The potential for these frost damaged crops for grain depends on the stage of maturity and the intended use of the grain. Estimates of potential grain yield loss because of frost/freeze injury at the soft dough stage are about 55 percent if the whole plants are killed and 35 percent if only the leaves are killed. At the full-dent stage, when a kernel millk line is just noticeable, loss figures are estimated to be 41 percent and 27 percent for a full and partial kill respectively.

At the half-milk-line stage, losses are reduced to about 12 and 6 percent for the same situations. (Carter & Hesterman, 1990).

Corn frosted at half milk line can still produce reasonable quality grain, but often there will be a extended drydown period. Corn that is killed prior to half milk line can experience some significant reductions in test weight. This lower test weight corn can be discounted in grain markets, but can be utilized effectively as high-moisture corn or as dried shelled corn that is fed to dairy or beef cattle.

Producers that anticipate significant amounts of low test weight corn should plan now for alternative marketing plans and later harvest of these crops.

On-Farm Program Working To Get Answers

Greg Roth
Professor Of Agronomy
Penn State

A relatively new program in the College of Agricultural Sciences is the On-Farm Research Program directed by Ron Hoover.

Hoover works with our agents and producers to develop effective on-farm research trials that answer some timely questions. Although Hoover works with a number of different crops, corn research is an important part of his program.

He has been working to evaluate the effectiveness of zone till relative to no-till production with some farmers, and also comparing zone till to conventional tillage with other farmers. Hoover has tillage demonstrations on four farms this year in Susquehanna, Fayette, Wyoming, and Erie counties.

Hoover has also been focusing this year on a multilocation evaluation of the new corn rootworm Bt hybrids. He has coordinated seven trials around the state in Bradford, Centre, Lycoming, York, and Lancaster counties. At each of these sites, corn rootworm damage has been assessed and yield data is being collected from farm scale plots.

Preliminary indications are that not all sites had severe rootworm damage, but in general the transgenic hybrids provided excellent control. We are finding damage on the roots of some of the transgenic plots and are trying to determine the conditions where this damage is most likely. As a result of Hoover's efforts, in conjunction with our extension agents and some of our colleagues in industry, we should have an excellent dataset on this issue to share with producers this winter.

If you have questions on corn production that you think could be developed into an effective on-farm project, contact Hoover at (814) 865-6672. Hoover can network with our agents and specialists and may be able to help develop some funding opportunities for good projects. Hoover can also help to make sure you get some meaningful results with a minimum of hassle associated with conducting the trial.

Got Ethanol?

Greater Philadelphia Clean Cities Program Receives More Than $130,000 To Build State's First Ethanol Fuel Station

PHILADELPHIA —For the first time anywhere in Pennsylvania, drivers will be able to fill flexible fuel vehicles with ethanol, a clean-burning alternative to gasoline.

Ethanol is an alcohol derived primarily from corn. Most newer model pick-ups, vans, cars and some SUVs are certified to run on fuel blends, including a mix of gasoline and ethanol.

A quick way to tell if you can fill up on an ethanol blend is to check the inside of the gas cap for the flexible fuel vehicle designation. Timing and plans for the new station, made possible by grants from the United States Department of Energy (U.S. DOE) and Pennsylvania's Department of Environmental Protection, were revealed recently.

"For the sake of energy security, our country needs to address its addiction to petroleum, much of which must be imported from volatile regions of the world," said GPCCP Coordinator Eric Cheung. "The feedstock for ethanol includes agricultural products such as corn and switchgrass. These crops, grown by farmers, make ethanol an American fuel, and consumers who buy the fuel will help keep energy dollars at home."

Ethanol is sold commercially as a blend of 85 percent ethanol and 15 percent gasoline, known as E85. In addition to energy security benefits, E85 also reduces smog-forming compounds and toxic air pollutants.

The E85 retail pump will be located at the Sunoco station on 12th and Vine streets and is anticipated to be open to the public by May 2004. E85 prices will be comparable to the price of premium gasoline. As local construction of ethanol plants occurs, prices will drop even more as consumers in Minnesota and Illinois can testify.

Clean Cities anticipates that initial users of E85 in our region will be local government fleet operators, but outreach efforts will include the general public. "Imagine the conversation at the pump as a Dodge Caravan filled with members of the community soccer team pulls in to refuel with E85 - the educational opportunities will be as big as the benefits to the economy," said Cheung. Flexible fuel ethanol vehicles are the most numerous of the alternative fuel vehicles produced. To verify whether your vehicle can operate on E85, log on to the National Ethanol Vehicle Coalition's Website, www.e85fuel.com.

A consulting firm, Sustainable Energy Strategies, Inc., has partnered with Clean Cities to install the E85 pump. Check this Website: www.cleanair.org/cleancities.

Ohio Popcorn Production Grows

COLUMBUS, Ohio — In the world of Ohio's specialty crops, popcorn is probably the most overlooked.

But despite its quiet presence, the crop has a firm foothold in Ohio agriculture. The state is ranked fourth in the nation in popcorn production (behind Nebraska, Indiana, and Iowa) with industry estimates ranging from 60,000 to 65,000 acres and interest in the crop continues to grow.

"Popcorn is a quiet crop that you don't hear a lot about," said Peter Thomison, an Ohio State University Extension agronomist. "But more growers are growing it, mainly because of the demand from end users and an Ohio market to sell the product."

Popcorn, unlike field dent corn, is a type of flint corn, grown to maturity in the field. By comparison, sweet corn is harvested halfway through the grain fill period.

"Popcorn is considered a specialty crop, but is grown much like field corn," said Thomison. "However, unlike field corn, it's harvested as pounds per acre rather than bushels per acre."

Popcorn is grown mainly throughout northwest Ohio. According to the Van Wert County office of Ohio State University Extension, the county leads the state with most acres of popcorn harvested and accounts for more than 3 percent of popcorn production in the United States.

Thomison said popcorn is one of the "healthiest" specialty crops grown in Ohio with local buyer outlets and markets available for contracted growers to deal with. But the crop does have its agronomic problems.

"One problem with popcorn is that it can lodge badly, more so than regular field corn," said Thomison. "This could be that there hasn't been a lot of hybrid development for growers and the hybrids that are available don't have stalk quality comparable to dent corn hybrids."

Lodging is a weather-related condition in which stalks fall over, making harvest difficult and resulting in loss of yields.

Growers interested in popcorn production can obtain information from several national Websites, including: www.agcom.purdue.edu/AgCom/Pubs/NCH/NCH-5.html; http://oregonstate.edu/Dept/NWREC/popcorn.html; www.ianr.unl.edu/pubs/fieldcrops/g426.htm; www.hort.purdue.edu/newcrop/afcm/popcorn.html; and www.agmrc.org/corn/pc.html.

Getting The Most Out Of Corn Demonstration Plots

John Rowehl, CCA, Grain
Cumberland County
Extension

Corn test plots offer all sorts of information to growers, only part of which is reflected in the yield results book that is handed out at the conclusion of the growing season.

Observations made in season give you a chance to look over other characteristics important to your variety selection decisions. Compare the relative heights (both plant and ear) among corn hybrids. High ear placement increases the risk of stalk lodging later because of the higher center of gravity. Check the relative stalk size among corn hybrids.

Thicker stalks are generally correlated with better standability later on. Split a few stalks and check the thickness of the rind. If you walk variety test plots closer to harvest, you can also compare hybrids for their relative stalk health and integrity.

By late August or so, you can pinch lower stalk internodes and check for stalk rot development. Hybrid differences for stalk rot development often reflect differences for tolerance to stresses in general. Look at the relative leaf health among corn hybrids.

This year in particular has been favorable for a number of leaf diseases to get started. If you plant a lot of no-till acreage, try to find plots that are also no-till. In no-till test plots, pay particular attention for hybrid differences for gray leaf spot infestation. If you find a disease you are not familiar with, ask your extension agent, crop consultant, or sales agronomist to identify it for you.

Another facet of leaf health is the so-called "stay-green" characteristic that reflects a hybrid's ability to simply remain viable longer than others. Generally speaking, "stay-green" hybrids have a higher tolerance to stress factors than others.

If little leaf disease is visible, yet some hybrids' leaves are "shutting down" while those of comparable hybrid maturities are remaining green, the latter are likely "stay-green" hybrids. Shuck a few ears and compare the relative ear size among corn hybrids. Kernel row number is strongly determined by a hybrid's genetics. Number of kernels per row (ear length) is more influenced by environmental factors and can indicate a hybrid's tolerance to various stress factors.

We would all like to shell 30,000 ears with 22 kernel rows each and 40 kernels long. Genetically, kernel row number may vary from as few as 12 to as many as 22. Numbers of kernels per row may vary from the low 20s to the mid-40s, some of which is genetically determined, some of which reflects a hybrid's response to growing conditions.

Later on, as ears fill out more completely, compare the relative "tightness" of the husk leaves. Fewer husk leaves, thinner husk leaves, and looser husk leaves are all conducive to faster grain moisture loss during field dry down.

Compare the relative uniformity of plant appearance among corn hybrids. Given some of the early season stresses this year on initial stand establishment in many corn fields, hybrids in a test plot whose plants appear more uniform one to another may indicate better early season vigor.

'Beer Can' Ears Make An Appearance

Greg Roth
Professor Of Agronomy
Penn State

Recently, Extension Agent Del Voight has reported two separate fields showing the blunt-ear syndrome or "beer can" ears in Lebanon County.

These are ears that are characterized by a relatively normal husk covering, some silk-balling, and noticeably stunted cob development. The result is a short ear with maybe 10 rows of kernels instead of the normal 35-40 rows and usually a short segment of cob that has not been pollinated because of to the failure of some silks to emerge.

We don't really know what causes the problem, but it appears to be more prevalent following springs that had some cool temperatures that may have caused some chilling stress to the plants. I expect we'll see more of these this year following the cool spring we had.

In some of the past years where I've seen this, there has been a weak relationship with some hybrids. In some cases it's scattered in the field, but in a few cases nearly the whole field can be affected, with serious effects on yield.

Dr. Bob Nielsen, my counterpart at Purdue University, has a graduate student who is studying this problem and is trying to document the situations where the problem has occurred. Bob and his student have prepared a downloadable survey form, www.kingcorn.org/research/beercan/FieldInfoform.pdf, for folks who are willing to share the background on a field showing these symptoms. If you find a field, please consider sharing the data on it with Bob.

NCGA Honors Voinovich With President's Award

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The National Corn Growers Association (NCGA) honored Sen. George Voinovich (R-Ohio) with its President's Award, a prestigious mark of distinction given to leaders who exemplify great commitment to U.S. corn farmers.

"Sen. Voinovich was chosen to receive the 2003 President's Award because of his tremendous support for a renewable fuels standard (RFS)," said NCGA President Fred Yoder, a Plain City, Ohio grower. "His tenacity and resolve to include an RFS in the energy bill has earned him thanks and respect from all corn growers."

Voinovich received the award at NCGA's Corn Congress, under way in Washington, D.C. State delegates have gathered to elect new officers, consider 2004 initiatives and launch CornPAC, the association's political action committee.

"Ohio's air is clean today because of our widespread use of ethanol and one reason I fought so hard to encourage more ethanol use nationwide is because I want other states' air quality to benefit from ethanol as we have. I also know that more ethanol is good for farmers and those benefits reverberate across state economies. It's an honor to receive this award because it's an honor to serve people who work as hard as Ohio's farmers do," said Voinovich.

"It is a privilege to work with Sen. Voinovich on issues affecting growers," said Yoder. "From his days as governor of Ohio to his work in the Senate, he has always pursued a progressive agriculture agenda based on innovation and growth. Sen. Voinovich is a true champion of agriculture."

Avoid Insects In Stored Grain

John E. Rowehl
Penn State Extension
Agronomy Agent

Here we are again at grain harvest. This has been a very damp year and that has made ideal conditions for the development of stored grain insect problems.

Sanitation and management are the best tools to avoid insect problems in storage facilities. It is a lot easier to prevent a problem than to fix it. It is also a lot cheaper. Once insects have become established in grain, it can be very difficult to fix without fumigation. Fumigation requires a special license and knowledge of the products and their dangers. In some cases, it may be possible to move the grain and treat it during transfer with a labeled product.

For preparing for this year's new grain, the following rules should be followed:

- Do not put new grain on top of old grain, and
- Clean out the bin to remove any old grain residue on the floor, walls, and ledges.

Other measures to prepare grain for storage include screening of broken kernels and other debris, removal of weeds and old grain from around the grain storage area, and drying grain to the proper moisture content.

If the grain is to be stored more than six months, a residual insecticide or diatomaceous earth material should be applied to the grain to prevent establishment of insects. Alternatively, surfaces of the floor and walls can be treated. Once the bin is topped off the surface of grain can be treated to create an insecticide barrier. This approach avoids exposure of the entire grain mass to insecticides.

If grain will only be stored during the winter and sold before the following summer, aeration and cooling can be used to prevent insect establishment and population growth. Grain should be dried to 13 percent moisture or less to prevent insect growth and development. The temperature should also be dropped to between 40 and 50 Farenheit.

These conditions stop populations from developing, but temperature and moisture levels can change while in storage due to moisture migration and heating. Therefore, the grain mass should be monitored for moisture and hot spots once monthly while in storage. If either condition is noticed, then the fan should be turned on during a few cool, dry days to remove the moisture and cool the grain.

A well-done publication on managing insects in storage from Kansas State provides information on the strengths and limitation of various products: HYPERLINK "http://www.oznet.ksu.edu/library/entml2/mf917.pdf" http://www.oznet.ksu.edu/library/entml2/mf917.pdf.

A helpful publication from Purdue University can be found on the web at: HYPERLINK "http://www.entm.purdue.edu/entomology/ext/targets/e-series/EseriesPDF/E-66.pdf" http://www.entm.purdue.edu/entomology/ext/targets/e-series/EseriesPDF/E-66.pdf.

Go to HYPERLINK "http:/www.ento.psu.edu/extension/fact—sheets.html" http://www.ento.psu.edu/extension/fact—sheets.html for Penn State's Entomology Website. This has information for specific insects. Product recommendations are in the stored grain section of the Agronomy Guide.

Twin-Row Corn Alternative To Traditional Technique

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Twin-row corn production a system of planting in narrower rows is not a new concept, but it's getting a fresh look from growers interested in an alternative production technique.

Peter Thomison, an Ohio State University Extension agronomist, said that interest in twin row corn is surging and the system may offer some agronomic and financial benefits that conventional and narrow-row systems don't provide. Anywhere from 90 percent to 95 percent of corn in Ohio is planted using a conventional 30-inch row system.

"Twin rows got a fresh look when there was a resurgence of narrow rows, generally defined as row spacings of 22 inches or less, in the mid-90s. There was this perception that narrow rows might have a lot more yield potential than conventional row spacings," said Thomison. "People started looking at twin rows because it offered an alternative to narrow rows without having to make any major changes in production practices."

Research studies have suggested that a narrow-row production system offers slightly higher yields than a conventional system, although results have been inconsistent.

In a conventional row-spacing system, corn is planted in a single row 30 inches apart from a neighboring row. In a typical narrow-row system, 20 inches separates each corn-row. Twin row systems fall in-between conventional and narrow row, with two rows of corn planted six to seven inches apart within a conventional spacing system.

Thomison said that like narrow rows, twin-row systems may perform better at higher seeding rates.

"If growers can get fairly consistent yields with twin row, then they could justify using the system. As opposed to narrow row, a twin-row system allows a grower to use existing 30-inch equipment," said Thomison. "Such a system would provide a financial savings for the grower because it doesn't incur the costs of converting to narrow-row equipment."

Ohio State researchers conducted a three-year study to determine the yield potential of twin row corn production. The study, which compared the twin-row system to 30-inch (conventional) and 15-inch (narrow) row configurations, found that the twin-row system performed as well or better than the other production systems, with a yield advantage over the conventional system ranging from 4 to 15 percent.

"We only looked at one corn hybrid," said Thomison. "So there is still a lot of work that needs to be done with this system to determine how other hybrids respond to it and how other agronomic characteristics are impacted."

Thomison said one problem researchers are finding is that with higher seeding rates comes a higher potential for lodging, a condition whereby corn stalks fall over making harvest difficult.

"If a grower has high yields now and is growing high plant populations, twin-row production may be one approach he can take if he is looking for an alternate planting option," said Thomison.

Researchers speculate the boost in yields from twin-row and narrow-row systems may be due in part to a more rapid plant canopy development that translates into higher yield potentials.

Corn, Soybean Conference Combines With Mid-Atlantic Tillage Conference

Greg Roth
Professor Of Agronomy
Penn State

Mark your calendar for the new statewide combined crops and no-till conference in 2004, scheduled Jan. 30 at the Grantville Holiday Inn near Harrisburg.

This year's conference will continue to address a number of topics on corn and soybean production. We'll focus this year on how foreign markets affect Pennsylvania grain prices and we'll also take an in-depth look at the potential of biodiesel and soy-based lubricants in Pennsylvania.

Other keynote speakers will address soil quality issues in relation to no-till and how we can manage compaction and still no-till corn and soybeans.

A number of breakout sessions are being developed on new technologies important for corn and soybean producers and will also address several addition issues on no-tilling in difficult situation.

The combined conference should attract a wider audience than the individual conferences and be a great place to network with others interested in corn and soybean production and no-till crop production in general.

CORN SILAGE DRYDOWN AND QUALITY PROCESS CLINICS: TEST, DON'T GUESS!

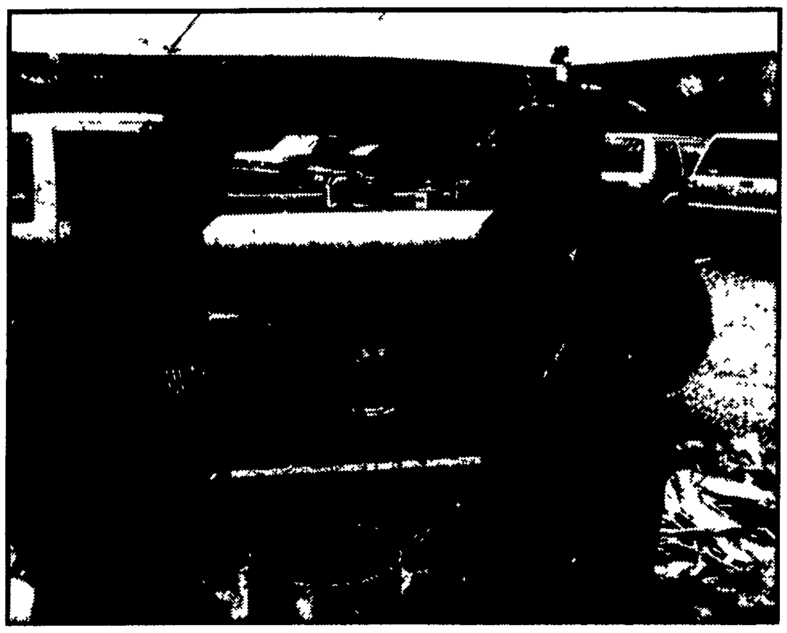
Dr. Sandy Costello
Penn State Cooperative Extension
Dairy Agent
Central Susquehanna Valley

Our Central Susquehanna Valley Dairy Extension Team conducted four corn silage quality assessment clinics throughout the month of September 2003. The primary purpose of the clinics was to provide area dairy producers with feedback on moisture content of whole-corn plant or chopped corn plant samples to aid in timing of corn silage harvest. Research has shown that corn plants harvested based on whole plant moistures will ferment better and provide higher quality corn silage feed for dairy cattle.

Forty-six whole corn plant or chopped samples were received from 20 dairy producers in Columbia, Montour, Northumberland, Snyder, and Union counties. Chopped samples were also tested for particle length to evaluate effective fiber quality of the future corn silage. Corn silage that is chopped too finely will provide little fiber benefit to cows and may lead to lower intake and greater chance of acidosis and other associated digestive disorders. Results comparing actual versus recommended chop length was provided back to dairy producers. The multicounty agronomist also evaluated whole corn plant samples using traditional dry down measures, including denting, milk line, black line, and milkiness or doughiness.

An observational comparison across samples showed no clear relationship between traditional corn grain measures and moisture content of whole plant samples. In other words, traditional measures (denting, milk line, etc.) provided limited assistance in determining when to harvest corn silage. Samples were also checked for insect damage and other stress indicators on whole-corn plants and findings were provided back to producers. Stress damage to whole-corn plants may indicate increased opportunity for mold and/or mycotoxin production leading to negative affects on animal health and production.

Timing of corn silage harvest for appropriate whole plant moisture based on storage method (e.g., upright silo, bag, or bunker) is critical to dairy farm profitability. When corn silage is harvested too wet or too dry, the risk increases for the following conditions: loss of feed (increased dry matter loss), poor nutritional value of feed (lower energy, starch and digestibility), decreased palatability of feed (lower intake), and increased opportunity for lower animal defense against disease (indirect affect of feeding poor quality silage) and a direct chance of disease associated with poor quality silage (e.g., ketosis from high butyric acid levels, listeriosis, clostridial diseases, and hemorrhagic bowel syndrome). Because corn silage is a major component of most dairy cow diets in Pennsylvania, poor quality will lead to lower dairy farm income (milk production) and higher farm expenses (higher purchased feed costs from poor nutritional value and less feed, higher veterinary and treatment costs).



Sandy Costello, left, multicounty dairy agent, discusses corn variety information with Chris Wolff of PenCol Dairy at a silage testing clinic in the parking lot of the new Union County extension office.

$10 Million Earmarked For Clearfield County Ethanol Plant

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — State Rep. Camille "Bud" George, D-74 of Clearfield County, said $10 million in state bond money has been earmarked to build an ethanol plant utilizing waste coal in Clearfield County.

"The money has been earmarked in the state's capital budget, but many hurdles remain before this plant becomes a reality," said George, whose amendment to Senate Bill 582 provides for the money. "I thank the governor for his support and look forward to advancing this project."

According to a business plan presented to the governor in April, a $56 million plant proposed for Karthaus Township would utilize waste coal to produce 40 million gallons of ethanol annually. Ethanol is a gasoline additive produced from corn that reduces dependence on foreign oil, helps balance the trade deficit, and prevents groundwater contamination.

Under the proposal, 41 full-time jobs would be created at the plant, and 694 jobs throughout the economy. The region would realize a one-time boost of $142 million during construction.

"The governor and the heads of his departments of Community and Economic Development and Environmental Protection must have been favorably impressed by the consortium's presentation or the budget item would not have been approved," George said. "However, the earmarked funds are for an ethanol plant in Clearfield County utilizing waste coal and are not tied to any specific proposal."

George said he arranged the meeting in the capitol among the governor and his staff, local economic-development officials and the consortium — which includes engineering, construction, financial, and energy officials. The business report, prepared with assistance from the Carnegie Mellon Center for Entrepreneurship, said the ethanol plant would:

- Expand the local economic base by $110.2 million each year through direct spending of $56 million.
- Increase the local price of corn by an average of 5-10 cents a bushel, adding significantly to farm income.
- Increase household income by $19.6 million annually.
- Boost state and local sales tax receipts by an average of $1.2 million.

George said the business report noted that 17 states have now banned the use of MTBE, a gasoline additive that is blamed for contaminating groundwater, and all major oil companies are eliminating MTBE from gasoline. According to the business report, demand for ethanol, a renewable, cleaner-burning energy source is expected to triple over the next decade.

"It was estimated that Clearfield County has enough waste coal to fuel the manufacturing of ethanol for decades," George said. "Markets also exist for the plant's by-products, including the used corn residue as feed and carbon dioxide and other gases for the cryogenic industry."

George said the consortium now must secure investors and stakeholders, secure transportation upgrades, and obtain environmental permits.

Area Corn Grower Is State Winner

ST. LOUIS, Mo. — An area corn grower has been named a state winner in the 2002 National Corn Yield Contest (NCYC), sponsored by the National Corn Growers Association (NCGA).

Kyle L. Henninger of Breinigsville, placed first in the state in the A no-till/strip till nonirrigated class with a yield of 223.7372 bushels per acre. The hybrid planted in the winning field was Dekalb DKC60-09.

The local operation was one of 497 state winners nationwide.

Kyle Henninger, Breinigsville, received a state award in the 2002 National Corn Yield Contest sponsored by the National Corn Growers Association. From left, Tim Hume, NCGA chairman from Walsh, Colo., presented the trophy on Feb. 28 to Debra and Kyle Henninger and their daughter, Brienne, during the annual Commodity Classic in Charlotte, N.C.

No-Till Pioneers Leave Legacy In Ag Production

WOOSTER, Ohio — "Glover, this looks terrible. They are going to fire you."

That's the reaction Glover Triplett a now-retired Ohio State University weed scientist received from his wife when he first showed her no-till plots at the Ohio Agricultural Research and Development Center some 40 years ago.

"You have to understand that my wife grew up in the South and her father grew a small acreage of cotton, which he tilled frequently. He was a big fan of neat, straight rows," said Triplett. Such was the mindset of farmers before the introduction of no-tillage in the U.S. the idea of planting crops with minimal soil disturbance.

Thankfully, for Ohio, the United States, and the rest of the world, for that matter, OARDC felt the need to keep Triplett and his research partner, soil physicist Dave VanDoren, on board to continue their work in no-till research. Today, the no-till plots at OARDC and Ohio State's northwestern and western research branches are considered to be the longest continuously maintained no-till plots in the world.

Many believe no-till was one production practice throughout U.S. history that revolutionized farming and without the benefits of no-tillage, farming in such countries as South America and Asia would be difficult, if not impossible. And it's all thanks, in part, to the pioneering efforts of two Ohio State researchers who were told time and again that their ideas were ludicrous.

In honor of Triplett's and VanDoren's efforts, the no-till plots at the three research locations were dedicated to the retired professors at the Midwest Conservation Tillage Conference on June 20 at OARDC. The plots have been renamed the "Triplett-VanDoren No-Tillage Experimental Plots." Signs will be posted at the location of each no-till plot with a date of establishment. In return, Triplett and VanDoren have established an endowment so that research, data collection and publications of Ohio State's no-till plots would never cease.

"You want to talk about thinking out of the box. These two individuals invented thinking out of the box," said Bobby Moser, dean of the College of Food, Agricultural, and Environmental Sciences, as he addressed visitors at the dedication. Setting his eyes on Triplett and VanDoren, seated at the head of the crowd, Moser said, "It takes an innovative mind to think this way. They got scientists to think differently about agriculture. It's a good day to honor those who have contributed greatly to agriculture and research."

No-till has become one of the most widely accepted technologies in agriculture. Of the 300 million acres of grain crops planted in the U.S., more than 110 million are planted using conservation tillage techniques. In Ohio, no-tillage acreage has jumped from 6 percent in 1990 to 20 percent in 2002. That translates into 55 million acres of no-till fields with two-thirds of the soybean crop and 20 percent of the corn crop planted into no-till.

Ohio State's no-till plots, now maintained by OARDC natural resources professor Warren Dick, continue to reveal the myriad of benefits of continuous no-till farming — reduction in labor, reduction in machinery wear, increased organic matter, reduced soil erosion, better soil quality, improved air quality, increased wildlife habitats and a better method of maintaining moisture.

"For growers looking to convert fields back to cropland using conservation practices, no-tillage is the way to do it," said Triplett. The OARDC no-till plots were once orchard grass sods that now consist of continuously grown corn.

PCGA is continuing the Membership Incentive Program (MIP) this year. The theme of the program is "Try Something New."

Take this opportunity to experiment when you choose your free bag of seed corn. This seed corn company sponsored program entitles any PCGA/NCGA corn grower, who plants at least five acres of corn with a 3-year new or renewed membership, to a free standard size bag of seed.

To participate, simply complete the membership form indicating the brand of seed corn you would like to try, along with your check for the 3-year membership. You will then receive a certificate for a free bag of seed from the sponsoring company of your choice, along with your membership card from NCGA.

In consultation with the local seed corn dealer, you make the ultimate decision about which hybrid you will receive from the company you have selected. PCGA will send the names and addresses by brand chosen to the appropriate seed corn company's statewide contact person and they will contact you.

In addition, you'll be joining thousands of other growers across the country who are showing their support for the corn industry. Locally, you'll be supporting PCGA's activities such as Corn Talk, our corn or crops conference, and local corn promotion activities.

Membership Program Awards Prizes For Recruiters

Now you can help the PCGA get new members and win some valuable prizes.

The PCGA is participating in a new membership program sponsored by NCGA and Syngenta to reward folks who recruit members for our association. To qualify, you need to recruit five new members in one of the next three months.

Prizes will be awarded to the top recruiters who have recruited a minimum of five new members in Pennsylvania for each month. In January, the prize will be a Palm Pilot. In February, the prize will be a $300 gift certificate to Sears. In March, the prize will be a gourmet ham plus a $100 gift certificate for groceries at a local supermarket.

To participate, make copies of the PCGA membership form in Corn Talk. Ask folks to complete the membership form and put your name on the Recruiter line on the bottom, and then send the form to the PCGA office. Or they can join online (https://gims.ncga.com/MEMBERNEW/Default.asp) and enter your name in the appropriate line on the application. We'll keep a record of the awards and send the prize to the qualifying recruiter at the end of the month.

Area Grower State Winner In National Corn Yield Contest

ST. LOUIS, Mo. — An area corn grower has been named a state winner in the 2002 National Corn Yield contest (NCYC), sponsored by the National Corn Growers Association (NCGA).

Gerald and Scoop of Milton, placed third in the state in the A no-till/strip till nonirrigated class with a yield of 206.7193 bushels per acre. The hybrid planted in the winning field was Pioneer 33B51.

The local operation was one of 497 state winners nationwide. This year's contest had a total of 3,291 entries from 46 states, topping last year's total despite disastrous weather conditions throughout much of the nation. The top yield in the contest — a record-breaking 442.14 bushels per acre — was produced by Francis Childs of Manchester, Iowa, who claimed the nation's highest yield for the fifth consecutive year.

As seen so often in the past, success in the face of adversity was the story of corn growers again in 2002, as nature sent the usual challenges of flood, drought, and heat.

Producers have used the contest to improve their operations by getting a unique opportunity to compare their own proven corn production capabilities with farmers across the country, said NCGA President Fred Yoder. "The contest highlights competition among our growers and offers them a chance to strive for excellence and get the most they can per acre."

The winning national yields ranged from 224.3 bushels per acre in the A Ridge-Till Non-Irrigated Class to 442.1 bushels per acre in the AA Non-Irrigated Class. The average yield of all winners was 210.6 bushels per acre, 10.8 bushels above the 199.8 average yield of all contest entrants.

Contest winners used a total of 159 different hybrids, compared to 509 hybrids used by all entrants. Fifty-one different seed companies were represented in the contest.

Farmers are encouraged through the contest to utilize new, efficient production techniques. A summary of agronomic data gleaned from the contest shows the following:

- Average plant population for winning entrants was 31,547 plants per acre; average harvest population was 29,858, compared to 29,596 for all entrants.
- 84.4 percent of all entrants planted their corn in 30-inch rows.
- 11.5 percent of winners applied in the fall, 35.0 percent preplant, 63.0 percent sidedressed and 68.4 percent applied as a starter.
- Average commercial nitrogen use per bushel of yield was 1.04 pounds for winning entrants, slightly below the agronomic requirement of 1.1 to 1.2 pounds per bushel.
- 13.0 percent used manure.
- 97.4 percent used herbicide, while 75.8 percent used herbicide and cultivation.
- 40.7 percent used insecticide.
- 65.2 percent planted after soybeans, while 21.5 percent planted after corn.

The winners were recognized Feb. 28 at the 2003 Commodity Classic, the combined convention and trade show of the NCGA and the American Soybean Association, in Charlotte, N.C. For a complete list of winners and for more information about the NCYC, visit the NCGA Website at www.ncga.com/02profits/CYC/main/index.html.

More GMO Corn: Increasing Risk Of Crop Contamination?

COLUMBUS, Ohio — With the production of genetically modified corn gradually increasing in Ohio, the risk of contaminating non-GMO corn through pollination is becoming more of a concern.

Peter Thomison, an Ohio State University Extension agronomist, said that growers who produce pure genetic lines or organic grain are at the forefront of the issue of "pollen drift" and should become more familiar with planting practices that prevent contamination by pollen from nearby GMO corn fields.

"It's going to require a lot of coordination among growers to help minimize pollen drift between GMO and non-GMO corn fields," said Thomison, an associate professor in the Department of Horticulture and Crop Science. "Most of the corn growers in Ohio are not too concerned about whether their corn is contaminated because most of the grain elevators will accept GMO corn. It's IP (identity preserved) or organic growers that might be concerned. IP growers represent people using conventional corn products or a GMO crop, but they are trying to grow a crop they can guarantee to an end user is free of GMO events not approved in certain overseas markets. Organic growers, since GMOs are not approved in organic systems, have to prove to the end user that the organic crop is not contaminated."

Roughly 10 percent of the corn grown in Ohio is GMO, ranging from Bt corns that target the European corn borer to herbicide-resistant corn like Roundup Ready to the new Bt corn designed to control rootworms. Since corn reproduces through cross-pollination, a certain percentage of a corn crop is pollinated by neighboring plants.

"Maybe 20 percent to 40 percent of the ovules on that ear of corn may have been pollinated from a neighboring plant, the result due mainly to wind and gravity," said Thomison. "Generally speaking, probably half of the pollen is going to be within the first 12 feet of the corn plants. At 40-50 feet away you are probably looking at around 1 percent of corn to be contaminated."

Thomison said the issue of pollen drift is becoming a growing concern in Ohio, not only with growers looking for pure crops, but also with seed companies and grain elevators where GMO-contaminated seed and grain may not be acceptable.

"Seed companies are concerned for purity reasons. They'll accept seeds that are 99.5 percent hybrid X and 0.5 percent Y, but they usually won't accept contamination levels exceeding 1 percent."

Some grain elevators won't accept GMO corn if a percentage of the grain has been contaminated with a GMO event not approved by the European Union.

"There are varying levels of what's acceptable," said Thomison. "Some grain elevators accept GMO corn regardless of what's in it because it's all going to animal feed, but some grain elevators may decline a Bt corn if it's been contaminated by an event not approved by the EU."

Growers plant corn with up to seven different GMO events, mainly Bt and Roundup Ready events. Less than half of these crops have been approved by the EU for use in Europe.

Thomison offers these recommendations for minimizing pollen drift during planting:

- Using separation or isolation distance to limit exposure of non-GMO cornfields from the pollen of GMO fields.

The potential for cross-pollination decreases as the distance between GMO and non-GMO cornfields increases. Several state seed certification agencies that offer IP grain programs require that non-GMO IP corn be planted at a distance of at least 660 feet from any GMO corn, noted Thomison.

When the isolation distance is less than 660 feet, these IP programs require the use of varying numbers of border rows to ensure that the non-GMO field is "flooded" with non-GMO pollen which will dilute adventitious pollen from a GMO source. These isolation and border row requirements are designed to produce corn grain that is not more than 0.5 percent contaminated with GMOs.

- Coordinating with neighboring growers on planting dates and hybrid maturities.

Using different planting dates and hybrid maturities can be used to reduce the risk of cross-pollination between fields. However, emphasizes Thomison, the difference in maturity dates has to be great enough so that the hybrids will not overlap during flowering.

- Situate a cornfield to prevent prevailing winds from contaminating a crop.

"Agronomists in states to the west of Ohio indicate that the south and west edges of non-GMO fields may be more vulnerable to pollen drift because the prevailing winds during the summer are from the southwest," said Thomison. "In Ohio, I'm not sure how consistent this wind pattern is but if it is an issue, then it may be particularly useful to follow recommendations regarding isolation distances and border row on these sides of non-GMO fields."

Other factors that might contribute to the purity of non-GMO corn include the purity level of seed planted, planting errors, volunteer corn resulting from no-till or minimal tillage practices and environmental conditions such as drought or flooding.

"Planting operations to manage pollen drift are only part of the process of producing an IP corn grain crop. Other major issues include harvesting, drying and storage, along with thorough record keeping," said Thomison.

He said that seed certification agencies like the Ohio Seed Improvement Association (http://www.ohseed.org/) offer IP programs for grain. These IP programs assist in preserving the genetic identity of a product, and verify specific traits through field inspections, laboratory analysis and record keeping.

White Corn Trials Help Boost Interest In Ohio

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Impressive white corn hybrid performance in the face of environmental stresses is helping to boost grower interest in the specialty crop as an alternative to the more common yellow dent corn.

Ohio State University Extension white corn performance trials, as part of a multistate testing program, found that white corn hybrids tested in 2002 yielded well enough to rival yellow corn, despite a wet spring and a hot, dry summer.

"What impressed us with the results was that some of these hybrids were yielding very well despite the growing conditions," said Peter Thomison, an extension agronomist. "It emphasizes that we do have white corn varieties available that are appropriate for growers to consider in Ohio."

Twenty-five corn varieties were tested in northwest Ohio and evaluated for a variety of characteristics, including food quality and agronomic traits. Results of the trials can be found online at http://corn.osu.edu/library/articles/2002%20White%20Corn.pdf.

Thomison said white corn production in Ohio is showing some spark with the premiums contracted growers receive for their crop and available end-user outlets. White corn is mainly used in the food industry to make such items as corn chips and taco shells. Unlike yellow corn, white corn lacks beta-carotene, a Vitamin A precursor.

"Before 1920, about half the corn acreage in the United States was white corn. Then the benefits of Vitamin A was discovered and growers started growing yellow corn, because they didn't have to supplement rations of Vitamin A," said Thomison. "Today, there's probably less than a million acres of white corn grown in the U.S."

Despite the limited white corn acreage, Ohio State researchers are in their sixth year of white corn performance trials to help growers interested in white corn production make wise management decisions.

"We provide a data base for growers who are interested in growing white corn to see what hybrids are likely to yield well," said Thomison.

Proper Grain Storage Means Good Quality

COLUMBUS, Ohio — The time and energy put forth in crop production should also be spent in grain storage. Improper grain storage can quickly shrivel a producer's investment into a lump of change.

Randall Reeder, an Ohio State University Extension agricultural engineer, said that with corn harvest nearing, growers should be reviewing the proper management techniques of storing grain.

"It is a wise investment of time to spend a few hours to maintain the $20,000 to $40,000 value of grain stored in a 10,000-bushel bin," said Reeder.

Grain stores best when it is dry, clean and cool, and free of insects, diseases and debris. "Weed seeds and fine foreign material, which are usually wetter than the grain, will accumulate in the center when loaded into a bin, causing storage problems," said Reeder. "This material should be removed from the grain."

Reeder recommends the following steps in preparing a bin for storage to ensure quality grain:

- Repair any holes that may allow water to enter. Look for holes by looking for sunlight coming into the bin. However, do not seal openings intended for aeration.
- Aeration should be used to cool the grain whenever outdoor temperatures are 10 degrees to 15 degrees cooler than the grain. The grain should be cooled to a temperature of about 20 degrees to 30 degrees in Ohio for winter storage. The time required to cool grain weighing 56 to 60 pounds per bushel using aeration can be estimated by dividing 15 by the airflow rate, said Reeder. "For example, the grain will cool in about 75 hours using an airflow rate of 0.2 cubic feet per minute per bushel," he said. "Air takes the path of least resistance, so cooling times will vary in the storage. Measure grain temperature at several locations to assure that all the grain has been cooled."
- Clean the inside of the bin using brooms and/or a vacuum.
- Examine the inside of aeration ducts for debris and insects.
- Temperature plays an important role in grain storage. The optimum temperature for insects is between 70 degrees and 90 degrees Fahrenheit. Cooling below 70 degrees reduces insect reproduction and feeding activity, and cooling below 50 degrees causes the insects to become dormant. The optimum temperature for mold growth is also about 80 degrees Fahrenheit. Mold growth is extremely slow below about 30 or 40 degrees. The expected grain allowable storage time is approximately doubled for each 10 degrees that the grain is cooled.
- Service the aeration ducts, fans and vents to ensure proper operation. Reeder said to look for indications of problems such as condensation on the roof or crusting of the grain surface. Most storage problems can be controlled during the winter by cooling the grain.
- Clean around the outside of the bin.
- Stored grain must be monitored so insect infestations or grain spoilage can be detected before serious losses occur. Check stored grain biweekly during the fall and spring months when outside air temperatures are changing rapidly, and during the summer. Reeder advises checking the grain at least monthly during winter months while outside temperatures are below 40 degrees. Check and record the grain temperature and condition at several locations. The temperature history can be used to detect grain warming, which may indicate storage problems.

NGSP Seeks Contestants

LUBBOCK, Texas — Despite hot, dry conditions that have dropped crop ratings across the U.S. Sorghum Belt, Gerald Simonsen, National Grain Sorghum Producers (NGSP) Yield and Management Contest chairman from Ruskin, Nebraska, is encouraging farmers to see how their yields stack up in this year's contest.

"We know there are skilled and dedicated producers out there whose sorghum yields could still be competitive with farmers from other areas and states despite these recent conditions," said Simonsen, referring to the contest's unique structure that allows producers to compete against historic yields in their own counties.

"Because contestants compete against their own county yields, even farmers in areas with traditionally low yields find their own entries are competitive in this contest."

Winners of the contest, which includes five divisions, are determined by the amount a contestant's yield exceeds the five-year average yield in that contestant's county as determined by USDA's National Agricultural Statistics Service. The contestant's score is the difference between their yield and the county five-year average. Winners are determined by high scores in each division. The contest's five divisions are non-irrigated conventional tillage, irrigated conventional tillage, non-irrigated no-till, non-irrigated mulch-till, and irrigated reduced-till.

Based on scores, state and national winners are named in first, second, and third places in each division. State first-place winners then compete for national honors.

Producers may enter as many contest plots as they wish. A nonrefundable, $35 minimum-30-days-to-harvest Regular Entry fee or minimum-10-days-to-harvest $70 Express Entry fee must accompany each entry/contest plot. State and national winners of this year's contest who are present will be honored at NGSP's annual conference slated for Feb. 15-17, 2004, Little Rock, Arkansas.

Producers who are interested in entering may contact NGSP by phone at (806) 749-3478 or by e-mail at member@sorghumgrowers.com. Entry forms in Adobe Acrobat pdf format also are available by visiting www.sorghumgrowers.com.
